THE LAST DETAILS
My heart ached for my friend, but I knew the only kindness I could do her was to ignore that locked door as she was doing. Therefore I dropped into a chair and asked the question which neither Dicky nor I had ventured to broach before, knowing that if she thought best she would give us whatever news she had in good season. But she herself had said that she was ready to talk, and I knew no quicker means of shoving the tabooed subject of Robert Savarin.

"Have they caught the man Smith?"
"No, they haven't—yet," she said slowly, and her enunciation of the last word was significant to me of the long relentless arm of the government service. "But he has been effectually cleared out of this section, his power and influence reduced to zero, and his property placed under surveillance so that if he comes back to it he will be apprehended. There is no other place where he possibly can be, in any degree as dangerous as he was up here, and he ultimately will be captured, of course, if he doesn't get out of the country."

She paused and looked at me steadily, as if she were debating on how much to tell me.
"You might as well know what it was he trying to do," she said. "But there are threads to the tangle which I must still keep in my own hands, so don't ask me any questions—you are always such a dear about that, anyway. Madge! But I shudder to think how near you were to death last night. He was completing his long-conceived plan to blow up the reservoir and put New York's water supply out of business. He had enough high-powered explosives hidden in different places to turn the Catskill mountains into a valley, and he was busy at some of the last details when young Crowley came upon him.

A Sinister Background.
"The trooper was able to ruin enough of the delicate mechanism Smith was handling," Lillian went on before my gasp had died, "so that his purpose was frustrated, before he struck Crowley that awful blow. He was evidently sure that Crowley was nearly dead, and would never regain consciousness. So your sudden sitting up must have effectually startled him. He had arranged such an effective alibi, however, that he did not stoop to silence you as less single-minded criminal might have done. He was anxious to get back to the inn, and exhibit himself, so that later he might get back to the reservoir."

She paused while I tried to digest the startling information she had given me.
"Of course, he's a monomaniac," she said, "but while this was his own particular scheme, and we are sure he played a lone hand in it, yet his money and his peculiar talents and his hatred of this country, dating back to pre-war times, make him a dangerous tool for certain gentry whom the service is watching. I told Col. Travers this morning that it was just as well he escaped for a time. His

GIANT LINER AGROUND IN NEW YORK BAY.
The Leviathan, queen ship of the American merchant marine and the largest and fastest vessel in the world, inbound from Cherbourg recently, went aground on a mudbank south of Robbins Reef Lighthouse, New York harbor, about one mile north of St. George, Staten Island. The accident was attributed to the congestion of marine traffic in the harbor and the desire of Capt. Hartley of the Leviathan to keep clear of this traffic. No damage was caused as far as could be learned. Photo shows Shipping Board tug trying in vain to free the Leviathan from the mudbank. The Robbins Reef bell buoy, showing in the corner of the cut, in dicates where the big liner grounded.

to tell you as much as I may of what I have learned this morning."
The door of that inner room inside whose rigid walls Lillian keeps the emotional part of herself locked most of the time, swung to again, and its lock clicked audibly in my ears. For an instant I had seen within, had caught a glimpse of this "complication"—she had named it—which was marring her autumnal love idyl. I had counted Robert Savarin in the gentlest, the most devoted, self-abetting of lovers. It shocked and disappointed me to find that he could be as pettily jealous as Dicky, as tyrannical in his attitude toward her work as Harry Underwood had been in his insistence upon her dyeing her hair and using rouge.

RADIO
By F. S. BARTON
Of course it's snowy, and the water pipes may be busted and the plumbers strike still on—but think what grand weather this is for radio!

The beanstalk of the fairy tale held the record for rapid growth until radio hit the world a couple of years ago. Now there are 15,000,000 radio fans in this country, according to the most reliable estimates made, and the subject is already important enough to win a place in President Coolidge's brief but weighty message.
The normal boy who used to live in secret caves and perform mad acts of daring criminal or otherwise, now trudes through the powdery snows of the north land, blinks before an amazing aurora borealis and possibly harpoons a seal or two before he turns in and wriggles his way into a fur-lined sleeping bag. Of course it was only in rare instances that there was a real cave handy, but a boy's imagination is little hampered by such things, and right now your son may be frozen in with McMillan and his companions, may be shivering with cold and eating sparingly of diminishing rations, while you are under the delusion that he sits humped over a radio set with the phones glued to his ears.

If you have a single circuit regenerative receiver and want to make it more selective, try wiring a variometer in the grid circuit. This will make your set a two-circuit regenerative receiver. A condenser in the antenna circuit will sometimes eliminate interference to a considerable extent.
To the man who gloats over the thought of administering poison to the pesky dog that digs up his onion sets, the orderly processes of the law are not attractive for the time being, and in the same way the recommendations of the radio conference in Seattle appear altogether too mild a remedial agency when what the radio fan really wants to do is dynamite every commercial and ship station that interferes with his personal enjoyment of radio. When the offending station goes off the air, however, and the distant broadcasting comes booming in, then any fan is ready to admit that the resolutions adopted January 3 point the way to a satisfactory settlement of most of our air troubles in the northwest, which troubles by the way are less perhaps than in any other section of the country except the farming regions of the middle west.

Specific suggestions were made for reducing interference with broadcasting according to which the coast to ship sending would all be done above 500 meters; 300 and 450 meter wave lengths would be abolished, and all broadcasting licenses issued hereafter would be for wave lengths not to exceed 500 meters. Further recommendations were made limiting the hours of transmission of the regular ship reports of positions.

A great benefactor is unexpectedly becoming a beneficiary—grand opera generously given to the radio public is in return being boomed at the box offices by an appreciative public. Sea sales are increasing tremendously, following the broadcasting of grand opera programs.

A Californian was heard to remark recently that he was getting the best radio set there was made, the samoise type. No, we take it back. That man was from up north. The Californian asked for the cellaret type!
