LIBERTY—"Lights Out."
OREGON—"Cameo Kirby."
BLIGH—"Broken Silence."

Not since John Gilbert starred in the role of the Count of Monte Cristo has there appeared at a Salem theater a character so romantically courageous and daring as Gilbert portrayed in the title role of "Cameo Kirby," which opened at the Oregon theater yesterday. The picture is clean, interesting and filled to the brim with situations that are thrilling but in no manner cheap.

"Cameo Kirby" is a Mississippi River gambler, who, to protect the good name of his profession, employs methods at the gaming table that are frowned upon in some circles. It develops, however, that he enters the game to protect the wealthy Colonel Randall from Colonel Moreau, a scheming gambler and as means to an end, wins Randall's entire fortune. It is Kirby's intention to return to Randall the deed to his plantation and all his money, but Randall frustrates his plans by committing suicide that night in his cabin. Kirby becomes a fugitive and by the merest chance seeks refuge in the Randall home. He meets Adele Randall, played by Gertrude Olmsted. Love, duels and colorful romance abound in the subsequent proceedings.

Judge Stapleton Sustains Insurance Commissioner

Judge G. W. Stapleton of the circuit court in Portland yesterday sustained the Oregon real estate law relative to right of the state real estate commissioner to revoke licenses of realty dealers. This was a case instituted against A. Marie Haug, who was accused of accepting $800 earnest money from Selma and E. J. Oaks, afterward failing to complete the deal. The real estate commissioner revoked the license and an appeal was taken to the circuit court, a right extended under the law. The court sustained the action of the real estate commissioner and ordered the return of the $800. This was the first time the law has been tested in court. W. A. Mulen, who has charge of the real estate department, appeared before the court.

Charles Francis Walker of Portland Speaks to Kiwanis Club Tuesday

Hearing a message of Kiwanis and a general philosophy of life, Charles Francis Walker of Portland spoke at the Kiwanis luncheon at the Marion hotel Tuesday, having as his theme, "To him that hath—." Mr. Walker is president of the Northwestern School of Commerce. "There are two questions I ask of my students," Mr. Walker said. "First, what do you have? and second, what do you do? If you have you are able to do, and unless you do something you become stagnant, and the more you have the more you are able to do." While Mr. Walker applied his subject chiefly to Kiwanis club principles, the application was also suitable to every individual. In speaking of the benefits he had derived from Kiwanis, Mr. Walker said it first brought fellowship, the privilege of mingling with others, and that this was often not appreciated until the privilege had been lost. Second was friendship—dividends reaped as a reward to fellowship, based upon confidence, integrity and intimate touch. The value each person owes to others was stressed as the third point with the opportunity to grow as the fourth point.

No collections are being called for and no guarantee of money has been suggested. Money has been tendered them, but it has been declined courteously. ### COOLIDGE HONORED ABRAHAM LINCOLN

While Governor, President Made Remarkable Appeal to Nation

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 29.—(N. P. A.)—With the approach of Lincoln day there has been a great demand in Washington for copies of the Lincoln Day Memorial Proclamation issued in 1919 by Calvin Coolidge when he was governor of Massachusetts. Many of his admirers claim that this proclamation is a literary gem, not only because of its simplicity of language, but also of the high and noble thoughts contained therein. Many have stated that the humble origin of Lincoln and Coolidge, both being poor boys on the farm, had much to do in moulding their characters and gave them a better view of life as it affects all of the people, not merely a few.

The proclamation reads as follows: "Fivescore and ten years ago that Divine Providence which infinite repetition has made only the more a miracle sent into the world a new life, destined to save a nation. No star, no sign, foretold his coming. About his cradle all was poor and mean save only the source of all great men, the love of a wonderful woman. When she faded away in his tender years, from her deathbed in humble poverty she dowered her son with greatness. There can be no proper observance of a birthday which forgets the mother. Into his origin as into his life men long have looked and wondered. In wisdom great, but in humility greater, in justice strong, but in compassion stronger, he became a leader of men by being a follower of the truth. He overcame evil with good. His presence filled the nation. He broke the might of oppression. He restored a race to its birthright. His mortal fame has vanished, but his spirit increases with the increasing years, the richest legacy of the greatest century.

"Men show by what they worship what they are. It is no accident that before the great example of American manhood our people stand with respect and reverence. And in accordance with this sentiment our laws have provided for a formal recognition of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, for in him is revealed our ideal, the hope of our country fulfilled.

"Now, therefore, by the authority of Massachusetts, the 12th day of February is set apart as Lincoln Day, and its observance recommended as benefits the beneficiaries of his life and the admirers of his character, in places of education and worship wherever our people meet one with another."

This proclamation, a timely and exceedingly interesting document, has been likened to the writings of Abraham Lincoln. There is a similarity in the phrases used by both, and through the president's recent speeches and messages the fact is apparent that he has always been a close student of Lincoln's policies and a great believer in the civil war president's executioned—the light of reasoning and of vision, in addition to the spotlight of conscience. Concentration is the clutch, with the three speeds of effort, pep and accomplishment. The brake of control often prevents mishaps. Tools of construction, chains of temperance, and a body or frame of stability is desired, with gears of obedience and a differential of efficiency. Genuine refinement constitutes the upholstery and finish. The tall light and horn of caution and a spare time of recollection is required. Loyalty corresponds to the mud guards, with license plates of honesty both before and behind. Tires of courage are filled with hope, while along the highway of life are the inevitable service stations of faith.

Think it over. If you were to receive from some of your friends a great big edition of that friend's home town paper and it was filled with facts from cover to cover, wouldn't it make an impression on you? It certainly would, and if you were intending to make a change in the location of your home or business, that very edition would probably sell you the idea that there was the place to go. Exactly so; and last year's edition of the Statesman brought several families to the Willamette valley. Some are in business and all are good, clean, prosperous folks, and we're glad they came.
