

BASKET CONTEST IS CALLED OFF

Silverton Claims Misunderstanding—Stayton in Crippled Condition

Salem High school basketball teamsters are looking around for a few good, snappy contests, several scheduled games having been canceled upon various grounds. There was no game with Silverton last night.

Silverton claims a misunderstanding of dates, and asks that its contest be played early in March. Monmouth has requested that the game slated for Friday night be called off. This request was not conceded by Salem, and the game will be played as slated. Salem plays Raymond, Wash., Saturday night here. Stayton has sent word that its team is in no shape to play, and definitely called off the contest.

Under the coaching of Hollis Huntington, athletic director, the Salem basketball players have been going strong and are exhibiting a championship brand of game. Though one or two contests were won by a very close margin, every game played this year has resulted in a victory. In spite of this record, three of the players are appearing in the first year of high school basketball.

With the recent defeat of the only other real contender for honor in this district, when Salem beat Dallas, 14 to 7, all other possibilities of disputes have been eliminated. Dallas will come to Salem next Wednesday night for a return game.

LEGION TO HAVE BASEBALL TEAM

Senator Name Likely to Be Dropped for Salem Club This Season

While the interest of athletic fans is still centered around the indoor sport of basketball, the clash of the bat and the call of the baseball diamond is beginning to be heard.

Assurance that Salem will have a baseball team in the field again this year has been given, though according to present indications the men will not appear under the name of Senators. Efforts are being made by committees representing baseball enthusiasts and the American legion to launch a team under the auspices of the legion post.

Several men who wore the uniform of the Senators last year are not in Salem this season and others who have had experience have located here. A check of available material has not been made, but it is reported action will be taken soon regarding the personnel of a local team.

The loss of Harry Wenderoth, former manager of the Senators, will be felt, and another man will be selected for the position left vacant by his leaving the city. For the purpose of filling this vacancy it is expected a meeting of baseball men will be called in a short time when a definite canvass of the situation will be made.

Anyone interested and who has had experience in the game can cooperate by getting in touch with D. F. Proctor at the Valley Motor company office on North High street.

Earl Shafer Stars in Game With Washington

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, Eugene, Feb. 6.—Earl Shafer of Salem, guard on the University of Oregon basketball team, scored six points for the varsity in the game with the University of Washington Huskies, played in the Eugene armory Monday night.

Shafer's playing was one of the features of the game. The tilt had scarcely started when Shafer, maintaining his reputation as being one of the best shots on the varsity, slipped under the basket and dropped the ball through the loop. His score was the first made by the varsity during the game. In the course of the game Shafer made four field goals and two successful free throws.

Astoria Juniors Coming To Play YMCA Midgits

Salem Midgits, junior basketball team, will meet the Astoria Juniors at the YMCA gymnasium Saturday night. The visiting team will arrive about 5 o'clock and contemplates remaining for Sunday church services. All of the players are junior members of the YMCA and vary in age between 14 and 16 years. The visiting aggregation is said to average about 120 pounds while the home team is a little lighter. Members of the Midgit team are Ivan White, captain; Ivan Katoray, Charles Simpson, George Edwards and Charles Hagaman.

The Astoria players are coached by Lyman A. Pickett, general secretary of the Astoria YMCA. Mr. Pickett was formerly engaged in YMCA work in Salem, having the position of boys secretary. In a letter to R. R. Boardman, physical director, Mr. Pickett says that he will be glad to see his old friends after the game.

Turner defeated Mountain View by a score of 16 to 11 in a recent game played at the YMCA.

Routine Business Done By Silverton Council

SILVERTON, Or., Feb. 6.—(Special to The Statesman).—The city council of Silverton met Monday night for its regular monthly session for the transaction of general business. Mayor Porter being absent, Councilman G. J. Barr was called to preside. The following business was transacted: A communication was read from the Woman's Relief corps inviting the council to be present at the dedication of the monument to the Civil war veterans to be held at last honors. For a little before the service began the casket was open and a few who knew and loved him best might gaze a moment at the still, pain-worn face into which death had brought at last something almost of the placid look of the years long past. Not all of those who crowded the rooms had this opportunity. It was reserved only for intimates, of whatever station in life, who mingled in this silent company.

Rooms Filled
There was dim light in the rooms. The shades were drawn, and only the soft glow of wall lights filled the chambers as those came who gently placed the steel covering above the tired face and men had known their last sight of Woodrow Wilson. All of the rooms were filled, and even the doorways blocked with those standing silently about.

In the hallway by the stairs, stands a great clock, which ticked solemnly in the hush. As the president and the old friends and companions of the trying days at the White House grouped about the casket, the members of the family came down from above, leaving only Mrs. Wilson and the two daughters of the dead president in the refuge of the landing above. The three clergymen took their places at the head of the bier.

The mellow chime of the great hall clock beat three solemn strokes through the stillness. As the last tone dwindled and died, Dr. Taylor, the pastor in Washington, under whom Woodrow Wilson sat in all his years of presidential greatness, raised his voice:

Into the room came eight men from the honor guard, their sun-tanned, youthful faces set in solemn recognition of the dignity and honor of the place that had been given them. They stood soldierly and erect a moment behind the black casket upon which now lay the cluster of orchids, Mrs. Wilson's favorite flowers, the flowers her dead husband often had sent her in the glad other days. The soldier, sailor and marine comrades stooped and raised the fallen chieftain to bear him out for his last journey.

Guards Line Street

Outside, the other men of the guard had double-lined the short way across the sidewalk to the waiting hearse. As the house door swung back and the three clergymen stepped out to take their places beside the hearse door, up and down the steep narrow street the multitude which had waited long for this brief glimpse, uncovered in the chill air. The men of the guard stood at stiff salute, and their comrades bore the casket down through the double rank and lifted it gently into the hearse. Behind the casket came Mrs. Wilson in deepest black, with a thick veil guarding her sadness from curious eyes. She leaned on her brother's arm and was helped into the waiting car that moved off at once down the hill behind the hearse. The honor guard was forced in rank on each side.

Next from the house came William McAdoo. The daughters of the dead president were supported on his arms as he helped them to the car awaiting them. Behind these came the other members of the family, the brother and the nephew, and those less closely kin to the dead. There was but one vacancy in the immediate family circle left by the place Mrs. Sayre, the third daughter, and her husband would have filled had time permitted their arrival.

Behind the family came President and Mrs. Coolidge, heading the group of distinguished men and old comrades who came up the funeral party. They were taken in the slow moving row of waiting cars and gradually the funeral train reached down to Massachusetts avenue and swung around to the right for its slow journey up to the cathedral.
