The Mental Genius Who Can Prove That Which Is in Your Mind Can Become a Reality

THAT which is in your imagination sooner or later becomes an effect or result. Whether that kind of thinking or concentrating has been good or bad—it brings in a short time good or bad results. Some people are afraid of their imaginationthey think they are dreamers.

The imagination is nothing else but the sub-conscious mind at work whether it is day or night. We must understand imagination, intuition, inspiration and reasoning in life, particularly in this mental age, to make any kind of success. The successful salesman must play upon the imagination of the buyer—and all, in every walk of life, must be salesmen. It is a cheap mind which sells cheap things—the man who invokes some of his artistic ideas and temperament into his daily business positively will reach success.

Two of the great principles in Psychology are the proper forms of concentrating and the great use of the sub-conscious mind; then when you have learned quickly how to use these, you begin to form the law of attraction. You form an attractive mind which attracts the things you want. When you have understood the law of attraction you learn how to create the law of association; then you begin to attract the kind of people you wish to associate with, the kind of home, the kind of person you grow to love, etc.

The kind of things and people we attract depends upon the strength and power of our minds. Your money-health-love success comes to you only in proportion to the quality of your mind. It takes well developed minds to do anything-but think how much more we can do when the conscious mind discovers that it has a greater partner, the sub-conscious mind, which is the three-fourths mind.

Come Tuesday night and hear this young scientist who by the use of Psychology discovered the without the aid of accessories and l lighting effects, so again during the last few years there has been a tendency in dramatic centers to return to theater conditions that demand imaginative sympathy from an audience and inspired act-ng on the part of characters. Now radio has given another turn to the art making it is necessary that all illusions be created without the ald of the eye but depending upon the ear alone. It would seem impossible to develop dramatic situations and create suspense under these conditions, but these things are being done in the broadcasting studios.

In one play, given not long ago from a California station, the scene was laid in India. Throughweird, unvarying beat of a native drum that did more than much stage equipment could have done to suggest the native setting. In the same play, by the way, there were some hair-raising gurgles when one of the villains was being throttled. One could then hear his limp body drop with a thud to the floor-oh, yes; radio plays may be decidedly thrilling.

An interesting experiment was carried on recently in the Mammoth Caves of Kentucky. The Knabe

Great Artists

THE flawless qualities of tone and action of the Knabe Piano have always commanded the attention and reverence of the famous artists, who have all claimed greater power and eloquence of expression on the Knabe than on any other piano.

NYIREGYHAZI

"The perfection of this noble instrument is apparent at all times. The tone very large and very beautiful -the action just what I like, always having an instantaneous response."

"The wonderful brilliance and sheet purity of tone coupled with an unsurpassable evenness and delicacy of action, has made my Knabe a constant source of delight."

"It gives me extreme pleasure to congratulate you on the Knabe Piano. ir me personally it is an inspira-Knabe is indispensable. Its volume and purity of tone blend exquisitely with the voice and the artist who chances to be without its friendly support is indeed unfortunate."

"To my mind the Knabe is the King of Instruments and justifies every past word spoken of it. I have never found any other piano that comes within the requirements of perfect balance of compass, tone quality, action and response."

"The Knabe—a dear and truthful friend, responsive and reliable at any moment, in fact a generous friend who puts all the means at my disposal to carry out my musical

MARTINELLI

"The Knabe is magnificent. I consider it the greatest help to a singer to be supported by this fine instrument in which sonority and charm blend with the voice."

ALMA GLUCK

"The volume and quality of its tone is a delight and inspiration and as an accompaniment for the human voice I cannot imagine its equal."
