BAKER TALKS TO LIONS CLUBMEN

State and Character Building Emphasized in Address By Candidate

State and character building, with emphasis upon the importance and possibilities of the flax industry to Marion county and the necessity of taking care of the boys and girls of Oregon, were the outstanding points of an address by Mayor George L. Baker, of Portland, candidate for United States senator, who spoke at the Lions club luncheon Friday.

"The possibilities of the Salem district are not appreciated by a majority of people," Mayor Baker declared. "Manufacture of $100,000,000 worth of flax besides revenue derived from by-products is possible from flax grown in Marion county alone. This is not possible until the people here believe in the possibilities. The flax industry is too sacred to joke about and must be taken seriously. Oregonians should resent any joke made about flax. The man who is not interested in the flax industry or in any other industry in his particular section is interested neither in the welfare of that section nor the state."

People who have been advocating the growing of flax have been called "nuts," Mayor Baker continued, paying tribute to R. J. Hendricks, whose far-sightedness, he said, is not appreciated by people in general. With the flax industry properly developed the possibility of a million people in Marion county alone is at hand while Salem has the opportunity of attaining a position of an industrial city not to be equaled by any other city in the entire country.

"A properly developed flax industry would bring in $300,000,000 to Marion county alone," the speaker said. "Products from all other lands in the state at present are only valued at $200,000,000. Don't let any industry slip away from Salem if it is only

Henry Ford's Two New Lake Boats To Have Windows in Their Engines

TWO of the most uniquely equipped ore carrying ships that ever sailed the Great Lakes are now under construction and will be ready this summer for service. They are being built for Henry Ford and, unlike most ore carriers, will be fitted both with living accommodations and engines that will be beautiful as well as serviceable. The cabins will be fitted with every accommodation and furnished after the style of the most sumptuous private yachts. But it is in the engine room that the real wonders will appear.

Mr. Ford has ordered two six cylinder Worthington Diesel engines for each ship and has specified that they be made as rich and delightful to the eye as they are efficient for generating power. To this end it is arranged that the new engines shall be specially painted and that they be ornamented in every way possible with nickel and brushed steel. All the hand rails, nut heads, hand controls, piping covers, ladders, straps and bands, for instance, are either being brushed wholly in nickel plate or in bright steel. The whole effect when they are installed will be like some colossal ornament in a giant's parlor.

And that is not all. It is going to be possible for Mr. Ford and his guests to see what is going on inside the engines as well as to feast their eyes on the outside. For that purpose glass portholes are to be installed in the side plates suitably illuminated by electric lights and anybody who desires can watch the movements of the great cranks and pistons in comfort from the outside. The two engines will drive the auxiliary generators which supply electricity for power, lighting heat and cooking purposes. In addition to furnishing power for some of the electrically operated hoists.

The ships, for which the Worthington Pump and Machinery Corp. is building these Diesel engines, are to be 611 and 613 feet in length, respectively, and will carry ore for the Ford works. The engines will be operated mostly for the comfort and pleasure of Mr. Ford and his guests when he uses his accommodations on the ships for short holiday trips. The engine rooms will be the most palatial of any in the country.

bined waterpower of more than the other 43, Oregon has one-half of this. Mineral resources are abundant and only wait practical exploitation and development.

Character development was emphasized in closing. Seventy-five per cent of the crime in Portland was found to have been committed by boys under 24 years of age, and investigations revealed the percentage to be about the same throughout the country.

"The boy of today is permitted to go where he pleases and when he pleases," Mayor Baker said, calling attention to the fact that the use of the rod was spared by present day parents. "The boy or girl is not delinquent. It is delinquency upon the part of the parents, who should be held responsible. The police courts cannot raise children and it is not their duty to do so. In Portland crime has decreased since we began to enforce the curfew law. This is being done not so much to keep the boys and girls off the streets as it is to impress upon the parents the need of their guidance."

Otto Hoppes presided as chairman of the day. Lion Stevenson sang "Salem," a booster song with the club joining in the chorus. Representatives of the other luncheon clubs were present as special guests.

"One-Eyed" Tom Says He Is Able to Prove Alibi

"One-eyed" Tom Gray, who is doing a life term in the state penitentiary, and who was indicted Thursday in Los Angeles on a charge of having been implicated in the robbery of the Arcadia National bank, denies that he was implicated. He says he was in Nebraska at the time working with a construction crew, and can prove an alibi.

Gray was only recently returned to the prison after having escaped and been gone for seven years.

Gray was sent up from Multnomah county November 17, 1912, to do life on conviction of robbery while armed with a dangerous weapon. He was made a trusty in December, 1916, and less than a year later escaped. He was never heard from until a few months ago when he was picked up as a suspect at Thermopolis, Wyo., and identified by prison records. He was returned to the state prison here November 28 last.

LOCAL MEN EYE COUNTY'S BLOCK

Attempt Made to Buy Court House Grounds for Business Buildings

Marion county voters will probably be given an opportunity to choose a new modern court house at no cost to themselves at the May primaries, according to Carl Webb, representing a number of prominent business men who are desirous of obtaining the present court house grounds for the erection of what they feel to be a needed business section.

The proposal, as set forth by Mr. Webb, is to have the present court house grounds appraised and then to acquire other property and erect a new court house and offer it to the county at an even trade. The new court house would be centrally located and in a good location. Several sites are available, Mr. Webb said last night, but he refused to divulge their location.

Mr. Webb and his associates are sincere in their efforts to purchase the court house grounds. They point out that the present building is old and will have to be replaced by a new building in the future. The men would place rigid building restrictions upon the property and only a certain type of high-class building would be erected.

Mr. Webb recently sounded out the county court regarding the plan. Both County Judge W. H. Downing and the commissioners agreed that they had no power to act without first obtaining the sanction of the people. The county court agreed that the plan was a good one but that they were powerless to act, according to Mr. Webb.

That the famous Salem civic center would not be destroyed by the replacement of the court house with a business block is the contention made by Mr. Webb, who

Horst Sustained in Suit Against Livesley Company

INDEPENDENCE, Or., March 14.—Information has been received by the local office of the E. Clemens Horst company that a Canadian court of appeals has upheld the Horst company in its suit against T. A. Livesley & Co., affirming the lower court in the case.

The suit is an outgrowth of a deal between the Horst and the Livesley company whereby a large quantity of hops was transferred to Livesley. The latter contended all of the hops were not up to standard. The Horsts sued to collect on the full amount of the contract and was awarded judgment for the full amount.

Roseburg Men Arrested With Bertha Copeland

Acquaintanceship with Bertha Copeland of Portland proved expensive for two Roseburg men Friday when they forfeited $100 each for possession of liquor. The men, said to be prominent in business in their home town, spent part of the night in the city jail after being arrested at a local restaurant at 230 o'clock Friday morning.

Bertha was the cause of the two men being $200 poorer, for if it had not been for her they probably would not have been arrested. The men, who gave their names as Milton Keyser and Ralph Knight, had picked up the woman along the line somewhere and were enjoying a late dinner or early breakfast. Bertha was being sought by local officers as a result of information furnished by Portland. She was wanted for larceny of wearing apparel.

While taking breakfast in the restaurant she was recognized by the Portland police, and with her companions, was taken to the station. The automobile in which the trio were riding was searched and some liquor found. One of the men is said to have been drinking.

As there was no warrant for her arrest the police here were unable to hold her and she was released. Bail was furnished by the two men, and later forfeited.
