MARRIAGE PROBLEMS

CHAPTER 156
 THE WAY KATHERINE TOOK LILLIAN'S NEWS

An unworthy little feeling, not positive enough to be dubbed envy or jealousy, but having in it elements of both emotions, sprang into life at Lillian's words.

So Katherine was my friend's "ace of trumps," in the game she was playing to learn the identity and nefarious design of the man who had been so terribly injured by a motor car just as we were about to overhear his conversation with Katie.

For a tense second the joy with which I was already welcoming Katherine in my thoughts was chilled. Then, with a swift reaction—a feeling of abysmal disgust at my own littleness—I scoured from my soul every vestige of the thought and I frantically hoped that Lillian's keen eyes had not detected any trace of it in my face.

That I would never know, however, and we went on with our plans for Katherine's coming, which included giving her the maximum of rest possible before sending her to the hospital to care for the wounded man.

"It's a crime to rush her over there so soon after her long train journey," Lillian said, "but I simply am at my wits' end. The people back of that man may appear at any time, and I must have somebody on the spot continually."

"If I know Katherine," I interposed quietly, "and I think I do, there will be nothing in the world she will welcome more than a chance to take up her old profession. She won't feel any fatigue, and I'll wager that a few hours' rest at the longest will be all she will consent to take. Just remember that she hasn't had much physical labor—she has always had a woman accustomed to heavy work, and keeping her tiny house in order and cooking for two must have been child's play to Katherine's capability. But I can read between the lines and see that she is about starved for some outside interest. Can't you imagine how she'll welcome getting into the real game again in any capacity?"

Lillian praised Madge.

"Yes, I can," Lillian answered promptly, "and I wouldn't trade for a farm my first look at her face when she realizes the ruse we have played to get her here."

"Neither would I! Therefore, you and I will go to meet her. Dicky would be sure to get things mixed up."

"What have you told him about Katherine's coming?"

"That she was coming to us and for a visit, taking advantage of Jack's projected trip, and that she probably would do some nursing if she had a good opportunity. Of course he wanted her for his mother right away."

Lillian made an exasperated little moue.

"I might have thought of that," she said. "What did you say?"

"Nothing—knowing Dicky," I rejoined dryly. "But you'll be able to manage that end of things through Mother Graham. Just

...loving soul will straighten Dicky out admirably, so he will not suspect anything."

"You are a very wise, shrewd and helpful lady, my dear," commented Lillian, and there was an approval in her voice which made my heart beat high with pleasure and it partly atoned for my littleness of a few minutes before. And when, at last the day Katherine had named in her telegram came, I drove Lillian to the station to meet her, there was nothing in my heart but joyous loving welcome for my cousin's wife.

"Oh! Boy!"

We saw her before the train stopped, for in an eagerness almost child-like, she had come as near as she possibly could to the steps of the car. And my thoughts went back swiftly to the days when I had first met her, and she had crept swiftly and surely into my heart.

She was as slender, as agile as a girl in general appearance as she had been then. But the face under the modish gauzy brown veil was thinner than I like to see it and bore only too plainly the traces of a spirit repressed, of an individuality trying to fit itself to a mold planned by some one else.

I was suddenly glad—fiercely glad—that my brother-cousin had gone so far away. I hoped he would wait a long time before returning—long enough to give this high-spirited girl a chance to be her untrammelled self again. And then I had advanced to meet her, Lillian close by my side, and Katherine had set down her bag mechanically and stared at me as if I were a wraith.

"But—but—" she stammered, turning to Lillian, "surely I read your wire aright. Didn't you say that—"

"That Madge had a nervous breakdown and needed you," Lillian interposed smiling. "Of course I did, and I hope your dear husband was satisfied with the reason for bringing you out here."

She looked at us with startled eyes that began after a second to brim with mischief.

"You mean—"

"That Madge's nervous prostration really is my need for your help in a bit of government work which only you can do."

And then Katherine Sonnot Bickett started us both, for like a delighted urchin, she gasped out happily that gamin slogan of "Oh! Boy!" and grasped our hands with a grip that made us wince.

KAFOURY'S TOPIC

Salem Merchant Tells Realtors What it Means to Be Citizen

America means a religion to the foreign-born citizen, and it is the American born who begins agitating the foreigner, whose heart has been set on coming to this country, and not the foreigner himself, according to Allan Kafoury, of Kafoury Brothers, who spoke on the "True American Ideals" at the Thursday luncheon of the Marion-Polk County Realty association.

"A man is not an American simply because he happens to be born in this country," Mr. Kafoury said. "The man who does not give the fullest extent of his allegiance is the greatest sinner. This sin is committed when a citizen does not discharge his political duties."

Mr. Kafoury said that America is for the liberty of each; each for the satisfaction of all and all for the welfare of America. Citizens must give way to the will of the majority and if laws are not made to suit the majority, exercise the franchise and change the law, but as long as the law is on the statute books, respect it.

Mr. Kafoury is of Syrian parents and was born in Brazil. He landed in New York, unable to speak a word of the English language, in 1909. He related some of his personal experiences in studying to become a citizen of this country, a desire he had had for years. Mr. Kafoury demonstrated his right to citizenship by joining the army when his land of adoption called for assistance. He is a member of the American Legion, the Salem Lions' club and has taken a keen interest in the affairs of the YMCA, as well as being connected with one of the city's leading stores.

2 ESCAPE FROM POTATO PATCH

Jack Law and Edward Brock, Trustees, Run Away From State Prison

Prison bars and a potato patch held no attraction for Edward Brock and Jack Law, who stepped in the brush while working on the prison farm, located a half-mile south of the penitentiary, about 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon and disappeared. The men were seen to enter the brush by a guard, who believed they went for a drink. When they did not reappear in a couple of minutes he investigated and found they were gone. Fifteen guards from the prison were dispatched to search the brush south of the prison. The men are believed heading toward the sea.

TURN HAIR DARK WITH SAGE TEA

If Mixed With Sulphur It Darkens So Naturally Nobody Can Tell

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive.—Adv.

SLASHING LAW IS EXPLAINED

State Forester Tells of Efforts to Protect Forests of Oregon

Requirements of the state law regarding the burning of slashings are set forth by F. A. Elliott, state forester, in a statement made yesterday. Mr. Elliott says he has received numerous inquiries recently concerning permits.

"The state law requires that slashings be burned," said Mr. Elliott, "and it is the aim of the state forestry department to enforce this law, but with the aim at all times to protect the young growth wherever possible. In an old slashing where there is good reproduction and the fire risk is small, owing to the decay of dead material, it is considered the best policy to protect the area from fire and thus save the reproduction. However, the state is making every effort to reduce the fire risk by requiring that all new slashings be burned at least within a year after cutting."

"No permit is required in order to burn prior to June 1. However, it is a good plan to get into communication with the district warden and request that he or one of his men be present at the time of burning. This is part of their duties and they are always willing to assist whenever possible."

"An owner is responsible for a fire upon his property regardless of the fact whether or not the fire originated upon his holdings, and in case it escapes is liable to twice the amount of damages if due to carelessness or for actual damages if only accidental."

"Between June 1 and October 1 it is necessary to secure a permit before burning any slashings, but the permit does not relieve the owner of any responsibility for damage done by fire to adjoining property."

"Burning permits can be procured from the state forester, district fire wardens, inspectors, members of the federal forest service holding state fire warden appointments, or county judges. In the latter case the owner must notify adjoining property owners 24 hours prior to starting the fire."

"Reports of the field men relative to the recent fires are coming in and they show that the original reports were greatly exaggerated. All the fires coming under the jurisdiction of the state were confined to slashings and the only appreciable loss was on the Salmonberry in Tillamook county where a small amount of logs was damaged by fire."
