DAWES HAS AN UNUSUAL RECORD OF EFFICIENCY

the 17th engineers. He was for a time associated with General Atterbury in transportation work, and then stationed at general headquarters as a member of General Pershing's administrative staff. His next advance was to the place of general purchasing agent for the American forces with the rank of brigadier general, and membership on the military board of allied supply. After the armistice he acted on the United States liquidation commission for several months, returning to Chicago August 3, 1919, after an absence of 26 months. He was awarded the distinguished service medal of the United States, named a commander of the Legion of Honor of France and decorated by Marshal Foch in Paris with he French war cross. The honorary degree of Doctor of Civil Law was conferred on him by Marietta college in 1921.

General Dawes was widely remembered for his appearance in February, 1921, before a committee of the house of representatives investigating the conduct of the war. Punctuating his remarks in spots with the emphasis of a teamster, and with little effort to temper the vehemence of his feelings, he scored the inquiry with blunt verbal broadsides which virtually terminated the activities of the investigators.

The committee, the witness said, was "looking for flaws in the brilliant record of the army."

"There are too many pin-heads throwing mud, he exclaimed at another point. Then he added:

"If you men would spend more time trying to stem the millions of waste going on under your noses we would have a hell of a lot better government."

"Don't call me general!" he once shouted to a committee member who had addressed him by his military title.

"Hell Maria," an expletive several times repeated during his testimony, long was associated with the general's name, and for many years he was referred to by his friends as "Hell Maria Dawes."

In 1919, following his return from France, he urged ratification of the treaty of Versailles, and American acceptance of the league of nations. The following year he launched upon a campaign in Illinois for a national budget bureau.

He was prominently mentioned for the Illinois senatorial candidacy in 1920, but refused to enter the race. He was understood, also, to have been considered for a post in the Harding cabinet the same year, which he also refused.

In June, 1921, following the enactment of the McCormick budget bill, General Dawes was named first director of the budget, in charge of all regular appropriation bills for the operation of the government. He accepted the place with the understanding that he would resign in one year. An account of the period from the general's book, "The First Year of the Budget in the United States," shows a reduction in expenses of approximately $1,600,000,000 in 1922, as compared with the previous year. The conduct of the routine business of the government was shown to have cost $907,500,000 less, due to the discharge of war-time personnel, in all departments, and a saving of between $250,000,000 and $300,000,000 was credited to the operation of the budget bureau.

Hotels for unfortunates, where "bath, bed and breakfast" was provided for 10 cents, were established in Chicago by General Dawes as a memorial to his father. During one period of two months in 1915, 27,651 men were cared for at the hotel. A similar institution for women was founded later.

EXTENSION OF TIME

PORTLAND, Or., June 12. — "An extension in time to September 15th has been granted by the treasury department for filing fiscal year returns of partnerships, fiduciaries and corporations" announced Clyde G. Huntley, collector of internal revenue, today. "Due to delay in printing the necessary revised forms, an extension in time until September 30th, has also been granted corporations for filing capital stock returns covering the period July 1, 1924 to June 30, 1925.

McNary. It was stated that arrangements are being made to send the planes here as soon as possible.
