"Here's the farm," Her wo had put such terror in me that could utter nothing but the three words of relief. And as I turn the car into the driveway I swift scanned the lighted windows to any sign of disturbance. When Lillian feared anything or anybody it was time for every one else to be indeed on guard.

Jerry Ticer came from the kitchsight of his honest, cheerful face made both my fears and Lillian's appear like the sheerest drama. But when I had put the car in the barn I found myself walking close to his stalwart figure as he swung his lantern on the way back to the house, found myself also glancing furtively around at the shadows of the shrubbery.
