STRAWBERRIES TO COME WHOLE WEEK

Cherries, Loganberries and Raspberries Will Come Fast Now, Too

Some of the finest strawberries that ever grew, even in the Salem district, premier strawberry country of the world, are coming to the Salem canneries. Full forces were working at the canneries, mostly on strawberries, yesterday, and altogether on strawberries at the barreling plant of Baker, Kelly & McLaughlin. There will within a few days be a tapering off of the supply, but there will be a lot of strawberries coming every day of this week, with a few running into next week. All varieties are still coming—but mostly they are the Ettersburg 121. These are about a week later than the Trebias and other berries.

World Beaters
The Ettersburg 121 berries coming now are bound to enhance the reputation of the Salem district in the strawberry industry. They make the best canning output ever packed. They are going to make the everlasting fortune of the strawberry growers here. They are going to make it easy to sell Salem canned strawberries at top prices.

Lots of Cherries
All the canneries will start on cherries tomorrow. The supply of Royal Anns is large and fine, and this will make a busy canning season; especially as loganberries are also beginning to come, and raspberries, too. The Oregon Packing company took in a lot of red raspberries yesterday.

The Raas interests will open up tomorrow barreling Royal Anns, in the Southern Pacific warehouse on Ferry street, back of The Statesman office.

The Northwest Canning company packed some rhubarb the past season. They were working on some rhubarb yesterday; near the last of the season.
