THOUGHTS FOR EVERY DAY By Editor J. H. Parker of the Conway (Arkansas) News

Could we all judge correctly by motives that surround each other's lives, wrote Kipling, we might be safe in our judgments. The danger lies in not understanding always the motives of another, and in our family vision we are apt to misjudge and censure where approval was due. Criticism, when made fairly and friendly to be helpful, is always proper; but so many criticisms without first taking care to understand the circumstances. Then it is that a cruel wrong is often done. Receptive minds, those which desire to be helped, invite criticism in order to be able to improve weak elements; while the headstrong, or don't-care, turn a deaf ear to friendly advice. Understanding a person, and comprehending motives correctly, enables one to see the better qualities; and then kindly criticism finds a welcome from those who would do better if they knew their weakness.
