The Literary Spotlight

By MARION ELLET
THE time is at hand, it seems, when the World War is coming into a proper literary perspective and real "war yarns" may be written. There are already fewer novels and magazine stories giving voice to the grief that are part of the frightful game of Mars.

Kipling is writing war yarns about men and trenches and raids and rations just as he used to write about India and the "barrack-room" with pathos but with wondrous humor. One of the best of these, "A Friend of the Family" appearing in the July issue of Hearst's International, has the real Kipling twist. It is the story of one of those quiet insignificant men whom the war brought from the God-forsaken sheep-walk of Australia, a man used to the open sky, to loneliness and to sheep, "the one created thing he'd ever open up on."

Hickmot had a knack for occluding his personality "like turning off a tap." He was a natural born camouflage. He could camouflage himself and he could camouflage air raids to order. Staging a private air raid for the sake of a friend is a mere nothing to a man who is used to God-forsaken places and to sheep; and that is why, as the narrator concludes with a touch of the old "perfidious" pride of the Islander for his provinces, "I'd hate to have an Australian have it in for me for anything I'd done his friend."

A Drama of Color and Passion To Tune of Canels' Bells
ONE of the most successful productions on the London stage during the past season was that of James Elroy Flecker's play, Hassan, enacted according to the text of an edition recently issued by (William Heinemann, Ltd., London). In his short career Flecker probably never wrote a more fearfully beautiful piece of literature, and, with the recent publication of the play in revised form and the subsequent production, it is coming into an inevitable if tardy popularity.

Hassan is an Oriental drama that even a lover of the Arabian Nights might approve. There is in it none of the hirsute gaudiness of the conventional Occidental conception of kind.

Mrs. Charles Richardson of Washington spent Thursday and Friday with their relatives, Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Henningsen.

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Davenport and family motored to Dallas on the fourth.

Mrs. F. Borgelt accompanied her daughter and son, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Ringwald, to Newport for the fourth.

A Brown and wife who have rented the store belonging to Noble Henningsen, went to a coast resort on the fourth.

Barrymore Starring In "Beau Brummel"

John Barrymore, paragon of actors, and the last word in matinee idols, graces the screen this week-end at the Oregon theater in the starring role of "Beau Brummel," the screen adaptation of the famed Clyde Fitch play. This classic of the screen opened yesterday to an enthusiastic audience who thrilled to the impersonation given of the most vivid character that ever flashed through the social life of Europe.

Flair is just what Barrymore possesses. As the dandy par excellence, the dandy who dominated the court of the Prince Regent, the exquisite dresser and insolent super wit, John Barrymore carries off honors. He seems made for the role, being, like the character of the Beau, the perfect flower of a gentleman.

Barrymore throws all his unique talent to interpret the gorgeousness of life, the singularity and dramatic quality of Beau Brummel, who began life obscurely, rose like a meteor to social fame, got a memorable snub and retreated to disgrace and misery. He is splendid when he ingratiates himself into the good graces of the Prince Regent, admirable when he savs the reputation of a too impetuous young lady, enviable when he collects around him all the cream of English society to listen to his epigrams, and pitiful when, toward the close, he becomes a parody of his past splendor.

We follow the hectic career of the Beau with rapt interest, and regret the speed with which the picture comes to an end. The supporting cast, which deserves high praise, consists of Mary Astor, Willard Louis, Irene Rich, Alec B. Francis, Carmel Myers, William Humphreys, Richard Tucker, Andre de Beranger and others. The able direction is by Harry Beaumont.

We recommend "Beau Brummel" as a picture you will like.
