Salem Will Reap Benefit
From the Sugar Beets and
Better Farm Prices

A sugar mill is in the offing. The Mormons are great sugar producers and they have come here to investigate. That means a sugar mill and thousands of acres in sugar beets. That brings us to the point of the first letter this week:

Editor Statesman:

I was glad to notice that some Mormons were in Salem for the purpose of investigating a sugar mill. I never question a man's religion but most certainly I will not in this. Only last week I was out near Jefferson and learned that some sugar beets were to be planted next year as an experiment. I know it is not an experiment because it happens I was here when we experimented before the war and but for that upheaval we would have had a sugar mill here now. That upset every calculation.

Now normalcy has come back and we ought to raise sugar beets. I believe it would be our one best bet. It is almost a sure crop and it brings good prices. The tariff has a good deal to do with that but this is a tariff country and certainly we will not vote against our own interest this year.

Very respectfully,

JAMES SINCLAIR.

This letter is another boost for the Willamette valley but from a different angle. But let the writer tell his own story:

Editor Statesman:

While this is a dry year it is not a bad one for business. The farmers are coming into their own. True, our fruit went for little or nothing but we have the consolation of feeling that it was largely our own fault. If we do not know enough to organize we will continue to make millionaires of middle men. But what I wanted to say was that the farmers are coming to the front mighty fast. They are getting prices for their wheat that will make them independent. I heard a man say that he had just threshed and his yield was 44 bushels per acre. That spells prosperity for the farmers.

With a prosperous farm condition it will make business of all lines better for Salem.

This year is our opportunity. We must realize our dependence upon the farms and be genuinely glad even if we do have to pay a little more for our flour and bread.

Very respectfully,

DAVID LONG.

YOU CAN HELP

Every Slogan issue of The Statesman goes to people who are interested in the subjects treated. The Slogan editor sees to that; and there are coming to be more and more subscribers who take The Statesman for its special Slogan articles alone.

The point is this:

You know people who are interested. If you have any stake in Salem, it is your duty as well as the Slogan editor's duty to get these papers into hands where they will do good; will help build up the country and the city. Seeing your duty, do it. Now. The year through.
