THE POET

Vague desires, born of a breath,
Clothed in the words he chose aright,
Words inevitable, sure as death—
Can we then say he "chose" aright?

Into his mind the image came,
Out of the void like voice scarce heard,
Instant he gave a verse to fame,
Natural and sweet as song of bird.

Since effort grim can give no song,
What is the power so wondrous weird,
Without which gift the whole is wrong
Though perfect quite the form he reared?
—Myrtle Wilcox Gilbert.
