FUND DRIVE TO BE CONTINUED

Statue in Memory of Local Men Killed in War Is Progressing

Continuation of a drive to obtain funds for the erection of a soldiers' monument in memory of Marion county ex-service men who died during the World war will begin next month, says Mrs. John H. Carson, president of the Salem War Mothers, who are fostering the campaign.

Mr. Blaesing, head of the marble and granite works which is preparing the statue, was in the city this week conferring with the War Mothers. He reported that the names and inscription for the tablet were almost completed and that the statue would be completed by October 1.

Since the publication of the list of Marion county ex-service men who were killed during the war, several names have been added and other corrections made. Through some unexplainable error the name of one man appeared as killed and he has hastened to inform the War Mothers of the fact that he had not been killed, is not dead at present and hopes to be alive for a great many years to come. The revised list of names will be printed again in the near future.

The statue being erected by the War Mothers is a large bronze affair entitled the "Spirit of the Doughboy." The monument selected for Salem, to be erected on the court house grounds, is a duplicate of the one erected at McMinnville. The drive for funds was postponed last June, but believing conditions better now and many people having employment during the summer, a final effort will be made in September to obtain the remainder of the necessary amount.
