Long Potato Vines—

W. A. Moore of route 1, near Hazelton Electric station, yesterday brought in a potato vine seven feet, one inch in length. The seeds were planted April 5 and were never irrigated. The entire field is about four feet tall. On the one brought in to The Statesman office there were four potatoes weighing about one pound each. Mr. Moore concludes that there must be something in the soil of this country that makes things grow. Although this is the driest year ever known, his potato vines are the longest ever known. He reasons well that there must be some sustaining substance in the soil.

BITS FOR BREAKFAST

As to a superiority complex—

Did you know that Oregon has the biggest caldera in the world—in which is Crater lake?

Also the greatest known underground marble caverns in the world, in the southern Oregon caves?

Also the deepest canyon on earth? The Grand canyon in Colorado is 6,000 feet deep. The Snake river canyon in Oregon is 7,000 feet deep.

And we produce the best and highest priced walnuts in the world.

And this is the only section of North America where filberts are successfully produced on a large scale in a commercial way, or can be.

And the only section of the New World where fine fiber flax may be successfully grown and manufactured, with the factories in eyeshot of the fields.

And we have the greatest dairy country in the world; we have produced nearly all the world record dairy cows in the world.

The list may be extended, almost indefinitely. Let's get the right slant on what we have and what we are—the superiority complex.

"The people want a government of common sense." — President Coolidge. That's a fact. That's the slogan. The people of this country are fed up on the hog-wash and flapdoodle of the Shipleys and La Follettes and all the stungulation of gloom of the sinks who piddle and peddle hot air. Common sense is not going to be so derided uncommon as it has been in the hectic political atmosphere of the past few years.

Answer Is Filed in Seeley Damage Suit

G. H. Ecker, one of the defendants in Edgar J. Seeley's suit for $30,000 personal damages, filed a complete answer yesterday to the plaintiff's allegations. The suit is an outgrowth of an accident on May 8 when the car driven by Ecker smashed into some steel rails being hauled on a truck operated by Harry Nelson, on the highway between Silverton and Portland.

Ecker alleges that the steel rails protruded some four feet to the rear of the truck and that even though it was dark, were not equipped with a light. He denies Seeley's claim that he was driving at a high rate of speed and without proper lights. In fact, he asserts, Seeley urged him to drive faster than he was willing to go. He denies that Seeley suffered damages to the amount of $30,000 and declares that whatever responsibility is fixed for the accident is Harry Nelson's for his neglect and carelessness.
