

CITY NEWS IN BRIEF

Mixed License Plates—An unusual case developing around mixed license plates through evident ignorance of all motor vehicle laws came to light recently when State Traffic Officer Newell Williams attempted to register an out of state car. The machine had one New York license plate when stopped by the officer. He directed the driver to the state house where he was told to register his vehicle. Later Officer Williams found the party enjoying a meal along the side of the road, the machine carrying Oregon license plates. A check on the numbers did not coincide with the names given by the drivers. Further investigation revealed that the tourists had a bill of sale for the car made out in Chicago. The party had worked in Montana until the time limit for the Illinois license had expired, then, finding one lone New York plate, they proceeded on their way through Salem. After registering the vehicle they purchased for $1 a pair of Oregon plates in Portland. Officer Williams took them to the state house and made them purchase proper plates and then released the party, which was bound for California.
