Somebody said, "Most people are more interested in a dog fight on their own road, if the dogs belong to their own community, than they are in a war in China." And that is true to a considerable extent. We like to hear most of all about the things that are happening in and around our own home. The Statesman tells you all about the doings right around where you live.

Essentially a community newspaper, owned by people in the community and published entirely in the interest of the local district (Marion and Polk counties), it fights your battles and the battles of the community in which you live, and is your best newspaper friend.

This paper receives latest wire reports of the Associated Press, the greatest and most reliable press association in the world. All the important news of the day is told briefly; charming short stories and features, exclusive reading matter for the women folks; authoritative market and financial reports; classy sport news; all about the theatres and movies. Not too bulky, handy to read. It's the home paper, par excellence.

The Morning Oregon Statesman publishes complete dependable news, features and editorials.

The Statesman is first in the development of the Willamette valley—in agriculture, horticulture, berries, livestock, roads, industries, education, social welfare, and all that tends to develop and build up.

The Statesman stands forth in unqualified support of every movement or undertaking in the best interests of the Willamette valley.

It carries the advertisements of the local stores.

Listen! By watching the bargain advertisements carried from time to time you can save many times the subscription price. Some of your neighbors save as high as 35 per cent of their annual buying costs each year. It pays to watch the advertisements in The Oregon Statesman—they are wonderful money savers for our readers.

The Pacific Homestead is the oldest, brightest and best farm magazine published in the Pacific Northwest. Published weekly—52 issues a year. There is a certain mark of distinction in being a subscriber to the Best Farm Magazine.

The Northwest Poultry Journal, the oldest and largest of the Pacific Coast poultry and pet stock magazines, a recognized leader in its class in the West, was established in Salem more than 29 years ago.

It contains from 40 to 75 pages each month and is well edited, printed and nicely illustrated. Among its regular writers are some of the leading poultry judges, poultry specialists and most successful breeders of the Northwest. It has always borne the reputation of being reliable and progressive. No line of poultry and pet stock breeding is neglected or overlooked in its columns. It has a fine and ably edited rabbit department and interesting articles are published from time to time on turkeys, ducks, geese, guinea fowl, and pigeons, as well as covies and other pet stock.

The 1924 Automobile Road Maps of the state of Oregon and Idaho, show all through trunk highways and main traveled roads with mileages between towns.

The map of Oregon is printed on good bond paper and in three colors—blue, yellow and red. The map is printed in blue, gravel roads are shown in yellow and paved roads in red. This is unquestionably the best auto road map of Oregon ever published. Some of the state's best map experts helped to make this map.

The map of Idaho shows the state highway system as officially designated by the Department of Public Works Bureau of Highways. The names and numbers of highways are given. This map is printed in blue.

Every home should have these maps. They are up to date 1924 Auto Road Maps. Throw your old auto road map away. It is out of date.

An opportunity such as this may never occur again—so grasp the opportunity now.

Money saved is as good as money earned. Save the money! Send in your subscription today—before you forget it.

KOZER MAILS OUT ELECTION MATTER

Offices to Be Filled on November 4 Certified By Secretary

Secretary of State Kozier yesterday mailed to the county clerks of the state the certification of offices to be filled by election at the general election on November 4.

Acting upon the advice of the attorney general Mr. Kozier has included in the information a statement that there is one justice of the supreme court to be elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Justice Lawrence T. Harris, and one justice of the supreme court to be elected to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Justice John McCourt.

"This action," said Kozier, "is based upon many years of precedent during which time a number of vacancies in the supreme court have occurred and have been filled in a similar manner."

The voters will ballot on the following: Five electors of president and vice president of the United States; one United States senator; one representative in congress for each of the three districts; one secretary of state; one state treasurer; one justice of the supreme court to fill vacancy caused by the resignation of Justice Harris; one justice of the supreme court to fill vacancy caused by the death of Justice McCourt; one attorney general; one dairy and food commissioner; one public service commissioner for district lying west of Cascade mountains, and one commissioner for district lying east of Cascade mountains.

Also there will be submitted to the voters such proposed constitutional amendments and measures as have been "referred to the people by the legislative assembly," those designated "referendum ordered by petition of the people," and those "proposed by initiative petition."

THREE MINUTE TALES By Ad Schuster

OUT OF THE JUNGLES

In all of the tribe of Central American Indians, Onoto, the man, and Wyda, the maid, were the only ones who were white. Because of their color they were held in esteem. The old chief was scarcely more important.

The tribe was preparing for the wedding ceremonial which would unite these two who, so far as they knew, were set apart from all men and women in the world by their color when, through the jungles and dressed in strange garb, came a whole company of white men. The surprise of the savages at seeing these visitors was no greater than that of Leonard Detwiler, leader of the explorers when he saw Onoto and Wyda.

"They are white Indians!" he exclaimed in triumph. "We have proved that the stories of the old conquistadors are true."

The wedding was put off while the tribe entertained Detwiler and his party and, all the while, the white men bargained with the chief. If he would let Onoto and Wyda go with them to a land where all the men were white there would be many presents.

"But you must bring them back," the chief insisted, "you must swear on all of the holy things of your tribe."

Detwiler made a solemn oath, delivered his presents, and the party left taking with it a wondering man and maid. The journey through the jungle, so difficult for the white men, was easy for the two but when the villages and cities appeared, Onoto and Wyda were frightened. In their fear and amazement they clung to each other for support and behind their round eyes and solemn faces there was nothing to indicate their thoughts.

Onoto and Wyda knew that for some reason they were objects of curiosity. Men pointed at them little boxes which clicked and they were made the center of crowds who stared.

But Detwiler hurried his charges to the ship, another thing which was so far beyond any dream the two had ever had that it held their senses in a sort of paralysis. They went through the Canal and saw long trains which looked like great snakes spouting smoke. Nothing now could be too great or wonderful; they were prepared.

Of the excitement occasioned by their arrival in New York and of the meaning of their visit to a university where they were regarded intently by a group of elders they understood nothing. The street cars, subways, great crowds and tall buildings overwhelmed their minds. At first they longed to go back to the tribe but as they grew more accustomed to the strange sights their fears quieted and they began to enjoy their experiences. Onoto told Wyda and she never wished to go back and the girl went with a smile, "only long enough for the wedding." They spent several months in the land of the white men, learned a few words of English, and then were told it was time to go. Wyda sighed and Onoto shrugged his shoulders.

"There is no help," he said, "we have promised. And when we get back they will never let us go away again."

"I wish," replied the girl, "we had never seen all of this. We will long, all our lives, to return."

So, with presents for the chief and themselves, they went back to the tribe. Detwiler had told them that if they cared to make the journey to New York again he would see that they were cared for but he did not know that his words only added to their grief. The pride of the tribe in its white members would be too great to let them go.

There was a wedding and a meeting of the tribe on the evening of their return. The fire burned and the group sat close while Onoto related his adventures. The young Indian told of the great ships which moved without sails and sent smoke to the sky. He told of the trains, the cities, the buildings which reached to the clouds, and deep silence greeted his words.

"In the land of the white men," said Onoto, "great snakes carrying hundreds of men and women, more than in ten tribes, run underground and overhead. More people than you have seen in your dreams pass through the streets every minute. The streets are filled with cars in which men ride and those cars run by themselves. And, 'he waved toward the sky, 'there are white men who fly in the heavens like great birds."

"It is enough," the old chief interrupted. "The white man has given to Onoto and Wyda the evil tongue. In these few moons they have forgotten what they learned in the jungles. Never in my life have I heard such lies!"

There was a murmur of assent and anger from the circle, and the chief went on. He spoke cruelly and with a fine sarcasm.

"Go," he said, "back to your flying men and great temples. Go back where you learned to lie!"
