Two Nails And Four
With his hands drawn up into his sleeves, his head held forward and his slippers falling noiselessly, old Chang Wah made his way. It was as if he saw no one and cared not a bit for the going and coming of his fellows. Yet on the edge of the sidewalk near the curb and opposite the alley entrance, the man who had vision for no men saw two tiny nails. He stopped, picked them up, dropped them into a pocket and moved on. Chang Wah, the silent one, did not turn as he passed the store of Sing Lee, nor did he stop to listen to the American music which came from the modern chop suey place of May Fang. He patterned on, dragging one foot ever so slightly and his hands were hidden in his sleeves. An old man picking up discarded nails. It is nothing, Ed Wylie smiled at the thrift of Chan Wah. When, next day, he saw the old man stop at the same place to salvage two more nails the lad felt he was facing coincidence.

Chang Wah picked up the nails quite as if he had expected to find them there. Then he looked around to make sure there were no more. Ed Wylie followed. It occurred to him that if the old man were adding to his income by gathering discarded nails the pickings were poor. Not once more in a walk of seven blocks did Chang Wah stop to rescue anything. He did not even seem intent on studying the walk of the street for possibilities. It was just by chance, Ed decided once more, that he had seen Chang do the same thing on two successive days.

"But if the old man does it three days in succession" the lad reasoned, "it will be a mystery." So Ed watched and Chang repeated the performance. Every day the old man paused, picked two nails, looked for more and went on. It was at once weird and ridiculous. Why should there always be two nails and why was the old Chinese interested in finding them at one other place on the sidewalk?

"I wonder what he would do," Ed thought, "if I were to get there first and find the nails. And I wonder what would happen if he found three or four?"

Next day Ed placed two nails beside two he found on the sidewalk in the place where the Chinese made his daily find. Hiding himself in the alley the lad waited.

Chang Wah came by—the methodical plodder—walking as if he were headed into a strong wind. He paused, picked up the two nails mechanically and then saw the other two. Immediately Chang Wah was a changed man. There came into his bearing something of stealth and cunning. Ed sensed it and thought of a panther stalking his prey. Chang Wah moved on with his hands in his sleeves, moved on the route of old, but there was purpose in his manner.

In front of the store of Sing Lee he made a quick turn. Ed saw him run in and saw, too, that the hands had come out of the sleeve. Something was shining and there was a loud report. Doors slammed and hid frightened men. As if by magic the street cleared. There was a commotion in the store of Sing Lee and it was there Ed came.

Inside he saw Chang held fast by four Chinese and a white man in plain clothes. Chang Wah was desperate, disappointed, and puzzled. His shot, aimed at Sing Lee had gone wild. He wondered why these men had been ready to catch them.

"Four nails," Chang Wah was saying to himself, "four nails mean guard is gone. Two nails mean watch out. How come four nails and the guard still here?"

And they led him away wondering why the signal had failed him. (Copyright 1924 by The Bell Syndicate, Inc.)
