Firemen Hear Shenandoah—
Slumber at the city fire hall Friday night was obtained in snatches, for the men had not much more than gotten sound asleep when their rest was broken by the fire at the Willamette sanitarium about 12:30 o'clock. They returned to the station an hour later. Keeping tab on the location of the Shenandoah by means of their radio, the entire crew turned out shortly after 3 o'clock and stood, shivering and freezing in the street, necks bent and faces heavenward in an attempt to pierce the fog and see the lights on the huge aircraft. The dirigible passed to the east, apparently about half way between Salem and Silverton and though they were unable to see its lights, the sound of its motors was plainly heard. Disgusted, they returned to their cots for a few more hours of sleep.
