Lights Go Out— Through some unknown reason a short circuit occurred on the high-power conduction lines of the PEP company between Portland and Oregon City Wednesday and the electric light service was interrupted in Salem for a few minutes in the afternoon. It is presumed that during the gale that was sweeping the Willamette valley at the time, blew a limb of a tree onto the high-tension line and caused the four lines to be burned out. Just as soon as the juice could be converted onto the new line between the two cities, service was resumed in Salem. There will be no further interruption to the patrons of the PEP company at Salem. The four lines which were short-circuited, are being prepared for the next emergency.
