For Sale or Exchange

HERE ARE TWO EXCELLENT 10 ACRE IMPROVED TRACTS!
Well located, only 40 rods apart, with nice east frontage on County highway, 13 miles north of Salem. Only one mile from town and high school, closer to country school. One of the 10 acre tracts is nicely improved; with good 4 room house and barn and beautiful oak grove; 4 acres in prunes, 2 acres bearing, also berries and other family fruit. Just a real cozy home, and good level producing land, priced very conservative for quick sale, at only $3500.00 with good terms.
The other tract near by, is in a high state of cultivation and fenced, and is excellent land, but poor buildings. This is also priced low, only $2250. Both tracts owned by same party and all clear of debt. The owner will accept good clear North Salem residence or close in 5 acre improved tract as part payment.
Owner leaving on account of ill health; reason for selling.

HORSEHAIRS AND HORSEHAIR WORMS

An interesting discussion on horsehairs and horsehair worms is found in a recent issue of the Pathfinder. It follows in part:

Will a horsehair placed in water turn into a snake? Many people believe it will. This is one of the superstititions which persist among certain classes of people in the face of modern science and enlightenment. A reader in Ohio writes us as follows: "In the Pathfinder I just read an article entitled 'No Snakes from Horsehairs.' I tried the same thing and the horsehair became a snake in a few days. I am positive I saw a snake." Others testify to similar experiencexs.

"Your negative answer to the query whether horsehairs placed in water will change to hair snakes causes me to disagree," writes a woman who says she was born in 1842. "When I was a young girl my parents lived in New York less than a mile from Lake George. Across the yard back of the house ran a spring brook which crossed the road just below. At the bottom of the brook was a great light-gray flat rock about five feet across over which the water passed about three inches deep. Many a time did I watch horsehair snakes—some of them two feet long—as they swam and wriggled about with a snake-like motion. Again later after we had moved to town a hogshead was kept under the eaves near the back door, for holding rain water. Mother wished to keep it clean and said we should use a cup to dip from it, but sometimes when in a hurry getting ready for school I would dip my hand or my comb in the rain water to moisten my hair when braiding. After a while mother called me to account for not minding what she had said. She said she had seen hair snakes in the water and that there was nobody to accuse except myself. Afterward when the sun was shining I looked in the water and could plainly see hair snakes a half yard or more in length wriggling and swimming about the same as there in the brook. I am a believer in hair snakes."

Another subscriber sends the following note: "I notice in your paper where a party asks whether a horsehair placed in running water will turn to a snake. I don't know whether you would call it a snake or not, but try it: Pull a live hair from a horse's tail or your wife's head—if you have a wife—put it in a fruit jar of warm water and after a few days it will become a living something and will swim with upraised head. Put it on the floor and it will squirm and try to crawl." Still another correspondent writes as follows: "Many years ago some friends and I were walking on a road near the farm stables and our attention was attracted to a wriggling mass in a wet spot in the road. Examination revealed a lot of horsehairs in their natural form, but there were many in the group squirming. Close inspection showed what appeared to be a natural head on each end and two eyes on each head. We watched them carefully for quite a while and then taking some in our hands and drawing them through the fingers stripped them of the gelatinous substance with which they were coated perfectly and nothing but horsehairs remained."

We quote from these letters merely to show how deeply this old superstition is intrenched. We receive hundreds of letters on this horsehair-snake question every year. Yet anybody with even a superficial knowledge of natural history knows that a hair can never turn into a worm. If there is any fundamental principle of biology upon which all educated people are agreed it is that an inanimate object will not become animate by anything we can do to it. The human race has done some wonderful things, but so far it has never succeeded in breathing life into an inanimate object. And a hair is an inanimate thing—it is not alive.

Where, then, does the horsehair myth have its origin? This question is answered by Dr. H. G. May in the Guide to Nature, published at Sound Beach, Conn., by the Agassiz Association. The old myth, says Dr. May, had its origin purely and simply in circumstantial evidence. "A hair is seen in a watering trough and later a worm is seen in the same trouble while the hair is not found. Moreover, the worm has some resemblance to the hair. The usual explanation is that the hair has turned into a worm." There is no question that imperfect observation is responsible for the horsehair fallacy. There is such a thing as a horsehair worm which looks somewhat like a horsehair, but it was never a hair.

Dr. May gives an interesting account of the life history of several species of hairworms. These worms are parasites in their larva stage. Mating occurs in the spring and the eggs are deposited in the water in thick strings which break upon short pieces. Under the microscope the larvae resemble fly maggots. The larvae attach themselves to some insect. Beetles, crickets, grasshoppers and cockroaches are common hosts for the hairworm. "The fully developed worm," says Dr. May, "takes up a position in the host such that its anterior end is at the posterior end of the host and sometimes partly protruded. In this position it waits for contact with water. When the host gets into the water the worm immediately proceeds to leave the host and to take up its free eistxenc in the water. The worms emerge in August, September and October and are then found swimming about in the stream or stranded singly among the grass and debris." The worms remain singly until early spring when they generally accumulate in masses about the roots of grass in or near rapids in streams. These are the worms which many people erroneously believe were originally horsehairs.
