Germans Plan Uniform Traffic Rules for Reich
BERLIN, Jan. 17.—With the re-establishment of normal conditions in Germany, the problem of traffic and transportation is becoming an increasingly live one. The middle which has resulted in Berlin from the attempt of the police to introduce American ideas of traffic regulation has led private citizens to band themselves together in an organization known as the Verkehrswacht, the Traffic Watch.

Eighteen organizations, comprising a total membership of 750,000 German citizens, were represented at the first meeting. They included automobile dealers, automobile clubs, motor cycle

Four Salem Men Have Long Service Record With Firms

For 24 years August Neugebauer, managing clerk of the Patton Brothers Book store has been with the firm, according to E. Cooke Patton. This is not as good a record, however, as enjoyed by Romeo Hunter, Fletcher Long and Nicholas Haas.
Hunter and Long are the managers of the E. C. Cross & Sons Meat Market and the former has been with the firm for 30 years and Long for about 25 years. Haas has been in the secretary of state's office for more than 30 years.

German Artists Willing To Rent Their Paintings

MUNICH, Jan. 17.—German artists have devised a novel way of earning a little money while prospective purchasers of their paintings are making up their minds. Through a central organization they will loan their pictures, at a small fee, to individuals and societies.

Thus a collector is given the chance to see how a painting will look in his house, and go with his family, before making the purchase, and schools and clubs can give art exhibitions at moderate expense.

Sandwich Peddlers Feed Berliners With No Lost Time

BERLIN, Jan. 17.—"Eat while you walk to your office," is the slogan of a new species of street peddlers which has recently invaded the downtown section of Berlin. Imitating Swedish models, these peddlers wheel an immaculately white cart through the city, on the top of which, under a glass globe, are exhibited appetizing sandwiches at a price of three for 50 or 75 pfennigs, depending upon the quality of the meat or cheese offered.
The peddlers themselves are also in white, in the familiar garb of a chef. They report a good business thus far. Hustlers who are disgruntled at the slow method of serving which is characteristic of European restaurants generally, welcome this means of getting away with a noonday lunch as they rush from one appointment to another.
