No fledgling feeds the father bird!
No chicken feeds the hen!
No kitten mouses for the cat—
This glory is for men.

We are the wisest, strongest race,
Loud may our praise be sung—
The only animal alive

PRACTICALLY EVERY CLUB in Salem is endorsing the splendid project which the American Association of University Women are sponsoring in bringing to Salem the second in the series of notable photoplays known as the Yale University series of the Chronicles of America. The film which is being presented on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week at the Liberty theater is "Jamestown," in four reels. The historical accuracy of the motion picture presentation of the colonization of Jamestown, an important event in American history as it is presented in the Pathe picture, "Jamestown," is guaranteed by the painstaking work of a number of distinguished historians.

This is the second subject of the Chronicles of America films produced by Yale University Press under the supervision of the Council's committee on Publication of Yale University.

An exact replica of Jamestown, the first permanent English colony in America, was erected. The buildings were even finished on the inside, so that all exterior scenes were staged in the buildings where the action was supposed to take place. H. A. Ogden, the famous historical artist, designed the costumes. Not only was great care exercised in the designs of the costumes, but correct colors were used when making them. The story told in "Jamestown"

OWN YOUR HOME

WHY American Citizens Should Strive to Become Home Owners.

This is "Own Your Home" day of National Thrift Week, and the following are brief expressions from local men of experience and big affairs as to why American Citizens should own their homes. From these opinions, home ownership means stability to local, state and national life, and to own one's home is fundamental to worthy citizenship.

Burn less gasoline and own your home.—H. J. Taylor, state senator.

Home ownership is the foundation of any nation.—Peter Zimmerman, state senator.

The home should be the second essential in home life for character building and thrift.—T. A. Livezey.

Home owners do not move as much as renters. Three moves is as bad as a fire. Home owners become substantial citizens.—Isadore Greenbaum, merchant.

Home ownership promotes saving, happier firesides, community stability, individual and family pride in civic affairs, and better citizenship.—C. Bohrnstedt, Real Estate and Insurance.

The home is the strength of the nation. There is much looseness of thought today as to the home and many evils have crept into our modern life. If allowed to continue and grow, will result in the destruction of the home and all that it stands for, and the result will be the undermining of the nation.—H. D. Chambers, Rector St. Paul's church.

I am much in favor of your "Own Your Home" campaign. Good citizens, as a rule, are home owners; criminals, as a rule, are not. Children raised in their own homes will remember it with reverence and pride.—George S. Hall, state representative.

There is nothing like owning a bit of property, whether personal or real, to make a person responsible. It acts like a bond with an official as between the citizen and the government. He becomes at once and automatically a part of the government—a stockholder in the great body, the United States, as it were.—Albert S. Roberts, state representative, farmer and livestock.

The man who owns his home is a fixture, while a renter is a transient. To own one's home is an inducement to lay by money to improve it. It begets confidence in one's self and pride in one's home. It makes a man feel that he has a direct and tangible interest in his country. It makes him more patriotic in that he feels that he is fighting for something that belongs to him. It makes better citizenship. Every full-blooded American citizen should by all means own his home.—Sam M. Garland, state senator.

Everybody should strive to own his own home as it tends to make one more settled and contented; makes him feel more like a part of his community, a taxpayer and citizen.—C. S. Hamilton, Home Furnisher.

In the interest of thrift we should all strive to become home owners. An interest in the home means greater interest in one's government—national, state and municipal. To the man it means a better husband and a better father; to the woman it means a better wife and a better mother. And to all it means uplifted citizenship.—A. J. Johnston, state senator.

Past the half-century post of life, sitting in the legislative hall dreaming of the fireside in far-away Eastern Oregon, and the home you call your own.—A. R. Hunter, state representative.

The safety, well being and very life of our nation rests upon the home because the home in its truest sense is the very foundation of our government, its well being and permanency. A home in the fullest degree cannot be without thrift and life habits of thrift are created by example and education. Homes and home owners should be our ideal and constant effort, the goal of every boy and girl.—William F. Woodward, state representative.

Own your home and drop the rent habit. A home of your own is better cared for and an adornment to your city. A rented home has only one feature—a shelter. Beyond this your interest ceases. A rent receipt never bought you anything.—J. A. Mills, Realtor.

The old saying, "A rolling stone gathers no moss," is invariably true. Most folks enjoy the comforts of a home. The one who rents can never in reality feel at home on rented property; hence in whatever occupation he cannot have the freedom of mind to put into his work but goes along in a sort of "I-have-to" mood. On the other hand, if he owns his home his family has a real interest in the making of a real home which leads encouragement to him who is working for wages at whatever calling, and, as a rule, causes him to be steady and loyal to his employer.—P. M. Gregory, Buttercup Ice Cream Co.

Owning his home gives him an interest in the country and therefore makes him a better citizen.—R. A. Harris, Realtor.

Continuous paying rent breeds discontent and lack of interest to care for the upkeep of the property in which one might live. And in most cases there is no thought of saving and all earnings are used up in various pleasures. If this same renter will buy a home, even though he buys on the installment plan, it creates happiness and the ambition to fix up and beautify the property. This increases value and is a cornerstone in the creation of an estate, whether large or small. Be thrifty and own your home.—Leo N. Childs, Realtor.

Home ownership stimulates self-reliance, independence and better citizenship. It establishes credit. Self-reliance—He has established for himself by his own toil a home and fireside. Independence—He is free from the exactions of a landlord. Citizenship—He is more vitally interested in the affairs of state in that he contributes directly through taxation to its maintenance. Credit—Honesty, industry and the ability to accumulate are the essentials in all banking and business relationship.—Oscar B. Gingrich, Automobiles and Accessories.

is of the menace of those brave early English settlers by the Indians and by starvation and disease. It also shows the abduction of Pocahontas, the lovely Indian maiden who was "the delight and darling" of her father, King Powhatan, and finally her marriage to Captain John Rolfe. Delores Cassinelli portrays Pocahontas and Leslie Austin is Rolfe. "Jamestown" was directed by Edwin L. Hollywood and will be shown January 22, 23, 24 at the Liberty theater.

One of the delightful affairs among the younger set will be the Cecilia Music club reception at 8 o'clock Friday evening at the T. S. Roberts' studio, 505 N. Summer street.

The Women's Foreign Missionary society of the Leslie Methodist church will meet at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon at the home of Mrs. Halvorsen, at 1775 South High street. Mrs. Selee will have charge of the lesson and Mrs. Bertelson of the devotional. The ladies are asked to bring their thimbles in order that part of the afternoon may be devoted to working on the sun-bonnets.

Elmer W. Stone, fiance of Miss Helen West, will arrive from California Thursday and will be a

American citizens should strive to become home owners because the very foundation of our government is based upon the home, and home owners, men and women taxpayers, are true citizens in every sense of the word. Owning their home they are not migratory but take pride in building up the community and state in which they reside for themselves and posterity. Hotels, apartment houses and even rented homes are not conducive to the higher ideals of home life and the rearing of families who will be the citizens of tomorrow, and upon whom the future of this great nation depends for survival, progress and Christianity. Without home pride, state pride and nation pride our government is lost.—S. M. Miller, state representative, nurseryman, banker.

I believe it should be the aim and ambition of every married man to own his home for several reasons. First of all, a homeowner is an asset to any community and is more likely to become a permanent resident than a renter. Secondly, the money invested in a home and all the improvements made will inure to the benefit of the owner, as will the additional satisfaction of knowing that he can remain as long as it suits his own convenience. Thirdly, the owner of a home can enjoy the inalienable right and duty to raise a family which is too often denied him by owners of apartments, or landlords of dwellings who serve notice that children are not wanted in their buildings.—August Huckstein.

"Own your home," is a fit slogan for National Thrift Week. When you buy your home you become rooted, you belong, you're a fixture. You open your eyes to the advantages of the community and you open your heart to its beauty. The people become your people and "their God your God," and there is harmony. The town becomes your town. You speak of the street as our court house, the schools as our churches, the church as our churches, and you justly feel responsibility. You tell how we're building the Y. M. C. A. and, though you may not have a cent in the bank, you even speak of the banks because they contribute so very largely to the public welfare, as our banks. You may own it, yet if you have a possessing interest in your home, it's a big step, yes, it's the big step toward peace of mind, worthwhile citizenship, and financial success. If you have a family, owning your home is the bright thing that will forever be the memory jewel in your children's retrospect and in the present it gives them standing in the community which is their natural heritage. It makes them feel that they are of some importance because their father owns their home. And what a blessing it is to know, that when you move, will be decided, not by a "hard boiled" landlord but by the family fireside council, and what a comfort to know that the motto "God Bless Our Home" in grandma's room is a reality and not a travesty.—McGilchrist & Pennington, Realtors.

The slogan "Own Your Own Home" should receive the serious thought of every citizen for it denotes thrift and is the initial step toward advancement. Home ownership is one of the most important principles that a community holds at large, it is the roadway to comfort, happiness, contentment and prosperity.—E. B. Grabenhorst, Realtor, Member of Salem City Council.

The slogan "Own Your Home" exemplifies thrift and should receive the hearty support of every American citizen. American citizens should strive for home ownership. They owe it to their family to provide them with a home. It has been said, that the lives lived and doctrines taught in the home are the influences that shape the doctrines of nations. The home owner becomes a better citizen and he has a better Home is supposed to be the most beautiful word in the English language. American citizens are further supposed to be specially proud of the great institution of the home itself as well as the word for it, indeed there is no place like home. It gives one a sense of responsibility, it has a sobering civilizing influence on a man to feel that a piece of this old earth is his, it gives one a permanent place in the community, an opportunity to make life long friends, and sweet memories to his children. I really believe that the reason for so much discontent in the world today is due to lack of home ownership. If every man owned his home there would be no bolshevists waiting to break down constituted authority. This being true, it's a grand old saying "God's in his heaven and Man's in his home."—N. C. Kafoury, of Kafoury Bros.

Home ownership means a greater and more stable government, for the reason that the ideals and principles of the individual citizen determine the principles of our government. My observation has been that when a home is purchased the owner immediately thinks of that city, and its various functions, as his city, and in turn naturally becomes more interested in the proper functioning of our government, as it affects his city and state. It means better children, who in turn become the citizen of tomorrow, as a settled place of residence means a more harmonious mother, and mother is the one who guides the destiny of the nation. A pride and love of home keeps children off the streets at night and under the proper parental influence. The love of home is inherent in the heart of every person from the least depraved to the saint, and if they are given an opportunity to acquire an equity in a home, they will make every sacrifice to pay for and improve it. This small start gives men confidence and is often the incentive that leads to nation builders. As the future development of the nation depends on good citizenship again I say that home ownership means a greater and more stable government and this means THRIFT.—Winnie Pettyjohn, Realtor.

They owe it to their family to provide them with a home. It has been said, that the lives lived and doctrines taught in the home are the influences that shape the doctrines of nations. The home owner becomes a better citizen and he has a better financial standing among merchants and bankers; he takes more interest in civic affairs. The mere fact that he has been able to accumulate and own his own home is open proof that he and his family are sound and progressive. It is easier for the home owner to secure a permanent position as he is a fixture in the city or community in which he lives. Home ownership tends to build up and make a stronger and greater nation.—Geo. H. Grabenhorst, Realtor; Director Salem Chamber of Commerce.

The slogan "Own Your Home" should with every citizen, become a reality and not just a by-word. It is one of the first steps toward "Thrift." The "Homeowner" is an acknowledged asset to the community and is therefore held in higher esteem by his friends and business associates.—L. E. Oberer, Realtor; First Vice-President Marion-Polk County Realty Assn.

By owning your own home you become a substantial part of the nation, hence more patriotic, and 101 other reasons.—C. O. Rice.

Owning a home makes for better citizenship. The desires and needs of the community appeal with special force to the taxpayer. The effort that finally brings the home develops thrift, that great moving force, that builder, that mighty equalizer of wealth. This latter helping to lay broad the very foundations of democracy.—R. P. Boise, farmer.

A recent editorial in Collier's commended the people of Oregon for the fact that more than one-half of the stockholders of the Portland Electric Power company, that serves 69 communities, are Oregonians. The Northwestern Electric company is said to have 5000 Oregon stockholders. These companies, and others like them, that, with the people's help, tie the state together into one intimate, friendly family, are the best answer to the question whether a republican form of government can live. Wherever their central offices, they are like factories or homes on our own street; they store the labor and the savings of yesterday, to work for us in the days to come. The community that does not own its own homes, that does not invest joyfully in the building of utilities that serve it, is a moral hazard like a powder factory that may blow up in a second, or a tent-town that a breeze may carry away because it isn't anchored to stay. A community is mostly faith, anyhow; these proofs of faith are our outward evidences that we believe in ourselves and so are worthy the trust of others.—Chas. J. Lisle.

From personal experience and observation I know there is no greater incentive to save than the spirit of thrift promoted by being in debt for a home; and, when the obligation is paid, the habit of Thrift and saving is firmly rooted and has become a part of the monthly and annual budget, thereby laying a foundation for future investments and independence.—Walter B. Miner.

The love for a home will induce thrift and it is a worthy motive. Any citizen of reasonable permanency, and employment, should have a home for his wife and little ones. The children are entitled to the memory of a home in the young growing years with the comradeship and associations that go with it.—Wm. Fleming, Realtor.

One of the prime requisites for success in life is "stability." This stability is unquestionably promoted by the ownership of one's home. Not only does the home constitute a financial tie to the community in which it is located, but it also promotes a sentimental attachment for, and a feeling of proprietorship in the community, which is very desirable and uplifting to one's character. One of the inevitable questions asked by large employers on the application for employment blank, is "Do you own your own home?" Knowing that an employee who does own his own home is, as a rule, more to be depended upon than a "floater," preference is given to such home owners in filling positions.—W. M. Hamilton, Jr.

Every normal man and woman looks forward to the time when they can live in their own house. Home owners are the best citizens. They are the happiest and most useful citizens. They are the backbone of every community. Their children are better trained than those reared in rented houses. The feeling that no landlord can order you to move is a comfortable one and a big help in the task of getting ahead in the world. My advice to young people is to go into debt for a home, but seldom borrow for any other purpose.—Jos. H. Albert.

Every man should own his home because it gives him prestige and a standing in the community in which he lives. One of the best ways to save money is buying a home on installment. I would have one by all means even if I had to borrow at the bank to make the first payment.—Edward G. Damon, Grocer.

I believe that every American citizen should own his home because "home" is the "unit" of the nation. The greater the number of units in a number the greater the number is. So with our nation, the more homes owned the stronger the nation is.—E. E. Fisher, M. D.

The sense of ownership is a divine institution. It should be properly recognized and directed. It has no more worthy expression than in the ownership of a home. To own a home should be one of the earliest objectives of every married couple. Nothing will do more to clarify the conception of individual rights and duties or to measure the metes and bounds of common possession. With these conceptions of our rights and responsibilities clearly fixed in our minds we in every way become better members of all social groups with which we live and labor. We are better citizens in the community, state and nation because we own our home and so share in its burdens and privileges.—W. W. Rosebraugh.
