The Willamette university freshmen suffered another basketball defeat yesterday afternoon in Portland when the Roosevelt high school romped off with the long end of a 26 to 18 score. The rocks were somewhat weakened due to the absence of Scott and Litchfield from the lineup, who were unable to go on account of classes. The Roosevelt aggregation were fast and accurate at the basket, and although the rocks, with Fletcher in the starring role, tried to break up their passes they were unsuccessful. The half ended 13 to 8.

The next game for the first-year men is against the Jefferson high school Friday afternoon in the Willamette gymnasium. Washington high school will appear on Saturday.

SHERWOOD EDDY IS STUDENT SPEAKER

World Known Author at Chapel Pleads Against Selfish Way of Life

Only two ways of life face the individual who goes out into the world, Sherwood Eddy, world known author and social worker, declared in an address to the Willamette university students yesterday morning. One of these ways may be summed up in the law of selfishness, and the other in the law of love. One way has as its aim the amassing of property; its method, competition; and its motive, private profit. The other aims at the building of personality, has as its method, brotherhood; and its motive, service.

The selfish way of life, Mr. Eddy declared, has been the cause of the great social and industrial strife that exists throughout the world. Drawing from his immense country of the world, Mr. Eddy pointed out a number of conditions that exist in the various

THRIFT WEEK TALES

Why Should a Young Man Save? By C. P. Bishop

What I have to suggest does not apply to the young man who has to assist his parents in the support of the family, or the young man who may be pulling himself through school and utilizing his entire income and principle to train himself for some permanent vocation, but it does apply to the young man from 20 years up, who has no family to support and should be employed by the week or month at a specified salary and knows exactly what his income is. An iron-clad policy by such a young man to save something is the beginning of thrift, prudence, and a maintenance as well as a reserve laid by for a rainy day and old age. Emergencies of all kinds, such as sickness or accidents are confronting us every day—these dangers are ever present.

An all-wise providence has provided nearly all of the animals of the world with the elements of protection if given a chance. The horse with his keen eyes and fleetness of foot; the cow with its horns to defend itself; the bee with its sting; the bird with its wings, and thousands of others can take care of themselves, but man, the greatest of all and endowed with the power of mind and thought; the greatest of all created beings and to contemplate the thousands from the beginning of the world and thousands with us now, who are rushing into the world without any thought of tomorrow totally lacking the self-preservation, is it possible to develop a generation of people who will be capable of taking care of themselves in all ordinary circumstances of life?

From six thousand years of observation, and the suggestion of Christ himself, who said: "The poor ye will have always with you," nevertheless we shall keep on trying to reach a place where we will do without our almshouses, county poor farms and free hospitals. The reasons for savings are innumerable and not one good reason for not saving. Few young men in all the vigor of youth fully appreciate what a serious thing it is to be without funds. How many of them, who are making their own living if they should be sick for two years would be without funds and their friends or the county would have to guarantee their hospital bill.

I am often importuned for credit by young men for a suit of clothes or a pair of shoes under most urgent needs, and on inquiry we find that the applicant has no one to support but himself, and all of a sudden finds that he is short of clothing. There is absolutely no excuse for this. He should keep his needs in mind and be prepared to supply them when called for.

Every responsible business man who is accomplishing something, no matter what business or profession he may be in, is only too glad to get back of and encourage the young man who is really trying to do something. He is ready to help him to save a few hundred dollars, put it in a good savings bank or a good safe loan and develop an acquaintance with the bank and let the business community know that he has ideals and a willingness to apply himself. C. P. BISHOP.
