QUARANTINE ON POULTRY PLAGUE

It Is Not Applicable to Baby Chicks and Hatching Eggs; "Never Touched Us"

The report has become current that Washington state's poultry quarantine against middle western and eastern fowls also includes an embargo against Oregon fowls, baby chicks and hatching eggs generally.

This report is erroneous, as the assurance comes from the department of agriculture of the state of Washington that quarantine order No. 460 does not apply to baby chicks or eggs for hatching. Therefore, business in the way of filling orders for baby chicks and hatching eggs may be continued as usual and without interruption or restriction. Many hatcheries and poultrymen have orders booked ahead, and, regardless of high feed prices and the eastern epidemic, which, however, is now well under control, the season promises to be a prosperous one as far as the poultry industry is concerned.

"Never Touched Us" Yet

The epidemic was introduced from Europe, and it is called the fowl plague or fowl pest. It never reached this country before.

Oregon has quarantined against it. The plague has not come west of the Mississippi, and it is not likely to get out this far, or to spread in the east, as congress at once made an appropriation of $100,000 to pay for fighting it and preventing its spread, and every known measure to stamp it out is being used.

Woodward to Present Views On Child Labor Sunday Eve

The proposed child labor amendment will be discussed by William F. Woodward, representative from Multnomah county, at the Sunday evening services of the First Presbyterian church, instead of the morning service, as was reported yesterday.

A popular mass meeting is scheduled for 7:30 o'clock to which all members of the Oregon state legislature have been invited to attend. After the presentation of the address by Mr. Woodward the meeting will be thrown open for discussion, in which questions will be answered. One stipulation, however, must be conformed with, and that is the questions must be in writing and must be signed by the one writing them. This is necessary in order that they may be considered by Mr. Woodward, who will answer them.

Concrete Pavement Would Be Mandatory in Oregon

Future hardsurfacing of Oregon highways would be with concrete only, if a bill introduced in the house yesterday by Representative Cowgill of Jackson county becomes a law. The measure, known as HB No. 118, was introduced by request. Specifications of the concrete would first receive the approval of the state highway commission.

Insurance Legislation Is Introduced to Legislature

Of importance to insurance companies is HB No. 119, introduced by Representative Russell, which provides that in cases where written demand was made by the assured upon the insurer, the latter shall notify the assured of the name of the person selected to represent him in a fire loss ap-

MY MARRIAGE PROBLEMS

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

CHAPTER 365.

THE REASON LILLIAN WAS FORCED TO HAVE "THE GRACE TO BLUSH."

The closing of the front door brought my angry pacing of the floor to a sudden stop. It heralded, I knew, the departure of the newspaper reporters, and I knew also that in another minute Lillian, and in all probability, my mother-in-law, would be rushing in upon me. Lillian, I guessed, would come with congratulations. Mother Graham with questions.

Luckily, I had been too angry at Dicky to weep because of the unpleasant encounter to which his escapade had subjected me, and I had no traces of tears to remove. But when I looked at myself in the mirror I saw that my face was unduly flushed with anger. I toned the color down with a touch of rice powder and had schooled myself to calmness by the time Lillian's impetuous knock sounded on the door.

"You're the peacock's most iridescent feather," she declared as she rushed into the room, with the complete abandonment to boydenish enthusiasm in which she sometimes indulges herself. "That ill-conditioned cub will have something to remember for the rest of his newspaper career if he lasts in the game, which I doubt, and you could just see the admiration leaking out of the pores of the other two. You're all to be chillsauce, old dear, and it's me, the little old veteran, that's telling you!"

"Miss Cargill and Mr. Rickett were very considerate," I said, flushing confusedly at her praise.

"She Was Well Coached."

"They're good scouts, the real thing in reporters," Lillian acquiesced carelessly. "and they'll give you a square deal. For that matter, so will the gifted Mr. H. Edouard Smythe, but from a different motive. He will be actuated solely by a fear of what may happen to him if he transgresses, and believe me, he'll be a most circumspect youth where your name is concerned. Zowie, but I wish the Dicky-bird could have been behind the curtains when you were wiping up the floor with what was left of young Smythe!"

"I don't," I retorted shortly.

Lillian shot a quick, keen glance at me then changed the subject abruptly.

"What did you think of Katie's sortie?" she demanded? Will you ever forget the way she upset young Smythe and grabbed that torn photograph from under his nose?"

"I think she was exceptionally well coached," I said meaningly, looking squarely into her eyes, and she had the grace to blush.

"She didn't need much coaching," she replied deprecatingly. "But you should have seen her stuffing those fragments of the photograph into the kitchen stove, setting fire to them, and standing over them with the poker until every vestige was consumed. She was like a Shakespearean witch in her intentness. I expected to hear her intone 'double, double, toil and trouble,' with every second, but instead she observed emphatically when she finally shut down the stove lid:

"Mother Graham Approves.

"Dere, I bet your boots no bunch of soap greens get hold of you now und make troubles for by Meassis Graham."

I laughed involuntarily at Lillian's inimitable mimicry, then sobered as there came the realization of Katie's intense devotion to me and mine.

"Katie is the real heroine of this little episode," I said gratefully and from the doorway my mother-in-law snorted violently.

"Don't you let me hear you tell her anything like that," she ordered. "Her head's far too big for her hat now, and I can see I'm going to have a fine time bringing her down to earth while you are gone."

I flashed an appealing glance at Lillian, and received in return one of assurance that she would stand between my temporary mental and my arrogant mother-in-law during my absence. Luckily Mother Graham was so unobtrusively consulting the gold watch which she wears on a hook fastened to her bodice that she did not see my interchange of glances.

"We're got 15 minutes before

BARBERS SEEKING CHANGES IN LAW

Nearly 75 of Trade Gather for Open Meeting and Banquet Wednesday

Amendments to the Oregon laws regulating barbering in order to bring the statutes up to date are being sought by the barbers of the state and to discuss such proposed legislation nearly 75 members of the trade from Salem, Portland, Corvallis, Albany and Silverton gathered at the labor hall Wednesday night for an open meeting.

It was pointed out that the last amendment to the law was passed in 1907, at which time barbering was limited to hair cutting and shaving. Since this time the activities have broadened. Though the beauty parlor interests will introduce a bill or two of their own during the session of the legislature, the barber amendments will also include the activities of the parlors.

Journeyman of the organization held a regular meeting, after which an open meeting was held. This was attended by visitors and the boss barbers.

Included in the delegation from Portland were members of the state board, F. I. Marshall, secretary of the board of barber examiners, and George Griffith of Oregon City, treasurer of the board.

Following the meeting a dinner was served to members of the local and their guests at the White House restaurant.

has been organized at Willamette university. The charter members are Ann Silver, this year's editor of the Wailuak, Ruth Hewitt, Genevieve Thompson, Hollis Vick, Joe Nunn, George Atkinson, Dick Briggs, Clarence Oliver, Juanita Henry, and Loyal Warner, with Prof. Horace Willison as faculty member.

Chapters of the fraternity are located in a number of large institutions, Willamette being the smallest school to obtain a charter. This marks the fourth national honorary fraternity to make it bow on the Willamette campus.

sel Mohney, Dr. R. E. Lee Steiner and Miss Cornelia Marylin. Reports were given by the various officers of the church, including the trustees, the Women's alliance by Miss Fletcher, the church school by Gerald Rubin, the Young People's Religious union by Mrs. M. Fereshetian, and the laymen's league chapter by Miles McKay.

The reports all showed steady growth in all departments. The church is free from all debts of the new building and a new budget was unanimously adopted.

The Women's alliance officers elected at the annual meeting are Mrs. C. S. Hamilton, president; Mrs. Lizzie Smith, vice president, and Miss Ethel Fletcher secretary treasurer. The alliance has done good work in the past year and the coming year will see it taking an active part in the social life of the church.
