Bulldog Makes Attack—
The "Master's Voice" plaster cast dog, which is on display in front of the Moore's Music house was the center of attention recently, when it was attacked by a small bulldog. The animal was passing the store and observed the plaster paris dog and immediately wanted to pick a fight. With growls and a show of the pugacious emotion he made a rush to the intended victim, who paid but little attention to the advances. The small fighter tried other tactics and it was not long before a crowd had collected around the pair. Finally after a one-sided fight the little fellow slunk away.

Need For Furniture Is Answered in Part at YW

Furniture for the YWCA has been received, according to reports from the Salem office, which included three chairs. This is not sufficient for the pressing needs, however, and other articles of bedroom furniture are needed. If it is possible the YWCA would like to secure some small bedroom tables, for use in the different dormitory rooms. They can be put to good use and will be fully appreciated. Mrs. E. E. Fisher and Mrs. W. I. Staley contributed the chairs to the local organization.

Only One Competitor

In big celery, Oregon has only one competitor. That is New York. Michigan is not in it; not even the famous Kalamazoo district, in the matter of size. New York is also the greatest celery producer of all the states of the Union. The Oregon celery met the New York product in competition at Kansas City last year, and it was a stiff competition. The Labish Meadows product, however, held its own, on quality, and then some.

Our Oregon celery sold all the way from Houston, Texas, which took four cars, up the line to Chicago and Omaha. One jobber at Omaha took 40 cars. He got his first car in July, and he used nothing else in the way of celery throughout the season. He took Labish Meadows celery as long as any was to be had. He is coming out this year to see how and where they grow such celery. There is nothing else like it on earth.

Omaha is a main division point in the trade, and it is fortunate that the Oregon product is so well established there, and on quality. In all, 227 full cars of celery were forwarded under Mr. Jones' direction last year and he hopes to handle at least 100 more cars than that the coming season. This is outside of local and express shipments.

High Freight Rates

High freight rates are a handicap. The charges run from $2.40 to $2.75 a crate, including icing. Mr. Jones is hoping for a 20 per cent reduction. He has a docket made up now asking for this reduction.

It is not a great job to sell Oregon celery late in the season, up towards Thanksgiving. It is harder to sell it early; and some of it comes on early and has to be sold. In July, August and September.

The country is eating more and more celery, and that helps; and the best trade is learning celery quality, and that helps the Oregon product.

Colorado is the principal competitor on early Oregon celery. That state has $1 a crate cheaper rate to the big markets, giving her growers an advantage.

Getting Easier

But the Oregon growers are putting out a better product every year, and in more attractive form; so that the marketing grows easier.

The same growers will have a lot of head lettuce to market in May. The country eats so much head lettuce now, that the market will take all it can get, at some price, if solid and of high quality. That is what the Labish growers proved their ability to turn out last year.

Increased Switching Facilities

From September 1 to January 1, there were shipped from Brooks 450 cars of produce. There will be 500 cars of onions alone this year. The Southern Pacific is figuring on providing increasing switching facilities there.

While they were in Chicago Mr. and Mrs. Jones attended the American Fruit and Vegetable Shippers' convention. They found Chicago crowded and hotel reservations at a premium.

NEVER HAVE SEEN SUCH GOOD CELERY

The Trade Is Thoroughly Sold On Our Quality Stuff, Ronald Jones Finds

Ronald E. Jones, sales manager for the Labish Meadows Celery Union, left Salem on the first of January for a trip to get better acquainted with the trade. He was accompanied by Mrs. Jones.

Their first stop was at Seattle, where they spent the second; then to Minneapolis for two days; to Chicago for four days; to Omaha for three days. Then their homeward trip, with a day spent in Spokane. They arrived home on Wednesday, the 21st.

Interesting Facts

In Seattle, Mr. Jones found O. H. Wood, purchasing agent for the dining cars of the Great Northern railroad, very well pleased with the Labish celery. Mr. Wood uses Labish celery exclusively. He pays a little more for it, but he wants quality and is glad to allow the difference for the best that can be had. The dining cars supplied with celery at the western end of the road go clear through to Chicago, using the Labish celery all the way, of course.

Had the Boards

At Minneapolis, the representative of the Labish product said the boys representing the California celery inquired when the Oregon celery was going to be all in—because they wanted to get a chance at the market; and they would have no chance as long as the Oregon supply lasted.

(The California shipments start about the last of October, and they run till the middle of February, with numerous small shipments even later.)

The Labish Meadows people sold 41 cars the past season to Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Their shipments to Chicago only started last year. Mr. Jones sent one car late; and the Chicago people took eight more cars as fast
