THE ASSURED HARVEST—Be not deceived: God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

OUR SPINACH INDUSTRY

We had a considerable spinach industry in the Salem district a few years ago, joining up our growers with the dehydration plant—

And no doubt the industry in this branch of it will be revived sooner or later, because spinach is a vegetable that lends itself well to dehydration.

But, for the iron in it, and for the vitamins and the vegetable salts, spinach is coming into more and more general use; the tonnage of its supply is growing fast—

And there is no reason why our farmers and gardeners should not develop a car lot supply here, to go to distant points, developing a market on a quality product, the same as has been done with our celery and is being done with our head lettuce.

It is now very well recognized that the production of spinach of a high quality in commercial quantities, and with sufficient tonnage to make it profitable to grow, is a specialized industry.

Any gardener, on almost any kind of land found here, can grow some celery, and he can grow some spinach—

But this does not mean celery or spinach that will sell on quality above the market prices for such vegetables grown elsewhere.

This specialization has been brought to success here in the case of celery—and it can be brought to success, the writer believes, in the case of spinach.

It is no longer necessary to say to the majority of the readers of The Statesman that the eating of spinach freely is a very important requisite for health.

Every kitchen or home garden should have some spinach, and two crops should be raised, and some of it should be canned at home, or the commercially canned or dehydrated article should be used when it cannot be had in the fresh form.

Spinach is nearly as important in the dietary as milk; and every up-to-date man and woman now knows that a virile race cannot be sustained without milk, nor healthy children raised, nor old people kept in proper condition.

One of the greatest arguments in favor of spinach growing commercially in the Salem district is the fact that the spring crop will furnish a cash return early in the season when money is needed for the cultivation of other crops.

And, in the same way, it adds materially to the net returns from any given number of acres of land under cultivation.

But we have got to learn to grow quality spinach, and a lot of it to the acre; and this will take special locations and specialized treatment and specialized fertilization of the soil.

All this is worth while, because spinach will persist and its use will grow—

And moreover it is a prospective valuable crop for greenhouse cultivation, for our home markets, and for shipping fresh to the cities and towns up and down the coast and to the big city markets throughout the country—

And the growing of a quality crop for car lot shipments would also lead to a great and growing demand from our canners, who could command a wide market if they could guarantee a strictly quality output.

If there is any member of the Legislature who believes there is anything wrong with the present management of the Oregon penitentiary, it is his duty and ought to be his pleasure to make a thorough investigation.

There are vague charges of lack of proper discipline, of too frequent escapes, and other whisperings. The writer believes the management of the prison is very good; that the discipline is fine; that the spirit generally is worthy of commendation, and that the work being done in all departments is about as good as it could be with the facilities at hand.

Even more: There is little or no political favoritism at the prison under the management of Mr. Dalrymple. This is as it should be. That institution ought to be as free as possible from political broils, as all the state institutions in fact should be.

The writer is convinced that the present management of the Oregon penitentiary will stand the full light of day; that, in fact, it is headed towards great things—toward complete self support and a model institution. There can be no model prison without self support.

THOSE GOLDEN WINDOWS poverty and surroundings, more and more longing to cross the valley.

Finally the trip was made. It was a hot, dusty day, and the boy planned to get to the house just when the windows of gold were at their best.

There were no gold windows there. The cottage was no better than his own, if as good. The house beautiful had been a figment of his imagination, drawn by the evening sun gliding the windows of the tumbled-down old place.

life are over in another place. Our discontented eyes look longingly at the golden windows of the house on the other hilltop, and we dream of some day entering the magic portals of that palace. It is a mirage, beautiful only at a distance.

Listen! The things worthwhile are the things all about us. The poor berate the rich and envy them, bemoaning the cruel fate that has kept life's good things away. But the rich have their troubles, and if they haven't learned the philosophy of life their riches can not be enjoyed.

It is safe to say that a majority of rich people are more unhappy than the poor people. As a matter of fact the world is one vast whispering gallery and we get back the echo of our own voices. It is the mirror which reflects the face we show into it.

DISILLUSIONED BILL "Big Bill" Haywood was a terror in this country for a number of years. Finally the web of the law was woven so tightly about him that he could not get away.

Dr. Sun is the most dead man in the world. He has been reported dead almost every month for the last several years. The public has begun to believe that the reports of his death have all been greatly exaggerated.

MY MARRIAGE PROBLEMS

CHAPTER 370. WHAT HARRY UNDERWOOD THREATENED AND MADGE COUNTERED.

There was no escaping Harry Underwood's insistence. He had made up his mind to learn everything I knew concerning Dicky's escapade—the newspaper account of which had sent him hurrying to join me—and I knew of old the futility of trying to thwart him.

"Yes, Dicky wired me this morning," I answered, and with the words realized that I had not uttered them with the reluctance I had imagined I would feel.

Indeed, I was discovering that despite my usual aversion to Harry Underwood I was distinctly glad to see him upon this occasion. I had felt very lonely and bewildered, especially as I cherished the queer, resentful feeling that meeting my husband after what had happened would be like meeting some one strange to me.

"Wired, eh? I'll bet he did! When he saw those newspapers this morning, I'll wager my last collar button that he made better time to the telegraph office running than any airplane flight he ever did. That boy just naturally spread himself and flew. What did he say?"

His absurdity was irresistible. I laughed for the first time since I had seen the newspapers. Mr. Underwood shot a keen glance at me, and I caught shadowing his eyes something which is rarely seen in them, an expression of pity and tenderness such as one gives a grieved child.

Madge Repeats the Telegram. "That's right," he said heartily. "I'm glad the old clown hasn't forgotten his bag of tricks. You need a laugh or two today. It's the only way for you to treat this little spreading of the Dicky-bird's wings. I sure would like to have been there when the old boy first lapped the newspapers this morning. After I'd given him the thrashing he needs, I'd have had the laugh of my life. But all this is beside the point. What did he wire you?"

"He asked me to disregard the newspaper reports, saying they were greatly exaggerated." I replied slowly, "and that the situation was the fault of no one but busy-bodies. And—he asked me to come to him at once, because Miss Foster and he need me."

I had not intended to retail all of Dicky's telegram, but Harry Underwood's piercing black eyes were like probes, and I had given all before I realized it. I must have sounded unconsciously in my last words the resentful bitterness which was mine at Dicky's sending for me because Claire Foster needed me, for there followed instantly an explosive volley of words from Mr. Underwood.

"Just Like All Women—" "Curse the Dicky-bird's impudence, anyhow!" he exclaimed, and his face was dark with anger. "To ask you"—he stressed the pronoun—"to come up there and subject yourself to the stares and comments of a lot of blasted old tabby cats, in order to protect a girl who hadn't any more sense than to get herself into a scrape like this—just wait till I see His Nibs. He'll get what's coming to him once in his life, or my fist hasn't lost its punch, that's all."

Now, while I knew that much of this was only Harry Underwood's melodramatic way of expressing disapproval, yet there was the ring of enough truth in it to affect me in a most curious way. For instead of being grateful and pleased at his undoubtedly sincere championship, I found myself bristling with resentment.

How dared he criticize my husband when his own treatment of Lillian had been unspokeably cadish!

"Who administered a thrashing to you when you brought so much sorrow to Lillian?" I asked pettishly, and the next minute was

SAP and SALT (By Bert Moses) Noah was a great floater of stock all right. The only disgrace in failure is an inability to survive it. A famous man is just as ordinary man who is away from his home town. Love has but one cure, and that comes when anybody tries to live on it. Fashion and Ford are conspicuous examples of the futility of ridicule. Some fathers are revered, while others are merely looked upon as a source of income. Her Heck says: "Droppin' in too often around meal time will split friendship quicker'n anything I know."
