NORMAL PRICES FOR SEED WHEAT

There Will Be Plenty of Seed Available to Reseed the Areas Frozen Out

Plenty of seed wheat will doubtless be available to Marion county farmers at normal prices for reseeding the frozen-out areas in western Oregon, says G. R. Hyslop, professor of farm crops at the Oregon Agricultural college.

While the total amount available of Federation and Huston will probably not meet all the requirements, White Winter, Wilhelmina, and Holland may be planted in January or February with considerable safety. Also Rink and Poisy may be safely planted in February and early March. Minnesota Wonder, sometimes called Early Wonder, is available in considerable quantities. This mixture, which has been masquerading under a variety of names for a number of years, is a good yielding mixture for farmers growing wheat for seed purposes alone, but does not market very well.

A number of cars of Jenkin Club are reported as available by a large grain firm in Portland, and the county agent of Umatilla county reports a surplus of seed above the reseeding needs in that county. This assures a liberal supply of seed at normal prices without the necessity of shipping Marquis wheat from long distances.

Order the equipment now and have it ready for use when the spring rush starts, says H. A. Scudder, Oregon beeman and bee specialist at the state college. There is much to do, and the one that has the supers on at the proper time gets the most honey.

QUALITY WALNUTS HAVE NO COMPETITION

records have been made with seedling trees it is generally accepted that the grafted tree is best for commercial purposes as it will produce profitable crops much earlier than the seedlings. The best success seems to be with trees grafted on black walnut root stocks. The grafted trees cost more money but bring earlier returns.

Much loss and disappointment has been experienced in the past by nurserymen selling inferior trees not true to name, grafted from inferior stock and other causes which practically wasted the time and money spent in trying to produce the orchard. It is a serious matter to discover after eight or ten years that you selected the wrong kind of tree or grafted inferior stock. Take counsel on the selection of your trees with those who know and who have no motive to advise you wrong.

OREGON SMILES ON WORTHY INDUSTRY
Success Greets Efforts of Leo H. Johnson to Become Independent
(By EDWARD T. BARBER)
Oregon responds most generously to every form of industrial activity in her midst. Her soil yields generous harvests to the farmers. Her industrial and commercial fields yield equally as generous returns to productive energy and activity when exercised by those skilled in the arts and industries. When such activities are directed by men of high purpose, determination and the ability to persistently move towards independence in their affairs, Oregon extends a most willing and helpful hand.

Leo H. Johnson can personally testify to the response given his effort to establish himself in a small independent business. A year ago he opened his electric store and shop at 1011 North Commercial street. His cash capital was small but his assets in energy, skill at his trade, and business ability were large enough to more than balance the small bank account. During the year he secured contracts for the electrical work on the New Salem Hotel, the Court Street Christian church, the Unitarian church and the Hayesville school. In addition to these he has established a local business at the store which holds bright prospects for the future. Mr. Johnson has no regrets for having cut loose from a salary and launched into a small independent business of his own.

The age at which a tree begins bearing depend largely upon the adaptability of the soil and other conditions and the care taken. Generally grafted trees will pay for their cultivation the fourth to sixth year, and at seven years will bear profitable crops. No one knows how long a walnut tree will bear. France has orchards three hundred years old. A ten year old orchard of grafted trees will bear 1000 to 1500 pounds to the acre. There are records of such bearing as much as a ton to the acre. The owner of a ten year old Oregon walnut orchards is certain of an income of $300 to $500 per acre for the balance of his life and the lives of many succeeding generations of his children. It is an endowment that is perpetual.

SALEM APPRECIATES A LOCAL INDUSTRY
Roberts Furnace Stands Test of Ten Years Hard Service in Homes
(By EDWARD T. BARBER)
The heating problem is always with us. Many attempts have been made to evolve a furnace which will produce the maximum results with the minimum of fuel. While perfection may not have been reached along these lines, the Roberts furnace, made by C. A. Roberts, 1011 South Commercial street Salem, is a long step in the right direction. Mr. Roberts is a deep student of heating problems and this furnace is an expression of his best thought and study for ten years. His first furnaces were installed in Salem homes ten years ago, and today are still doing as good service as when first installed. This is pretty good proof of the correctness of the ideas involved.

It is a hot air furnace. The combustion chamber is so designed that almost perfect combustion takes place. Every portion of the surface is equally heated, no cold fronts and hot backs. The fire box feeds the fuel to a central point at all times, thus economizing fuel. The heat and smoke are conducted through a "radiator" which presents a very large surface to the air current. The furnace burns either wood or coal and the drafts are so made that the air feeding the fire is warmed before entering the fire box. The furnace is made so as to practically eliminate all "kick back" of smoke when opening the door to put in fuel. Every point of extra service is protected with the thought of extending the life of the furnace. The parts of the grate and fire box are interchangeable so that repairs are easily made and every part is easily removed. Convenience and economy stand out as prominent features of the furnace and Salem indicates its appreciation of the furnace by keeping the small shop busy all the time.

Mr. Roberts, in addition to his furnace business, is in great demand as a sheet metal worker specializing on gutter work. Any one interested in either of his lines, the furnace or the gutter work, will be well repaid by a visit to his shop and having a talk with Mr. Roberts, who is full of furnace wisdom.

COLLEGE ASSURES POULTRY RAISERS
No Cause for Alarm Concerning Fowl Plague That Afflicted the East
That the shipping of day-old chicks across state lines is not affected by the quarantines and embargo regulations against the fowl plague is the assurance to Oregon poultry breeders given by the state college experiment station.

The fowl pest has caused consternation and actual loss in middle western states and some states further east, says Dr. B. T. Simms, head of the veterinary medicine department, but has not appeared in any state as far west as the Rocky mountains so far as known. Unfounded reports tend to throw a panic into some poultry growers and damage the breeders correspondingly.

Dr. L. F. Pelton, state veterinarian of Washington, has wired Dr. Simms that the regulations made by that state do not apply to day-old chicks. The same may be said of the California regulations, and as far as known, of those of Idaho and other states.
