follows that the state is not bound as the other party to the contract but is free under such an emergency to consider competitive offerings from other concerns. Such a contingency appears to be already provided for by section 5346, Oregon laws, which empowers the chairman of the textbook commission, or the governor, to call the textbook commission into special session when "for any cause" it becomes necessary to adopt any textbook instead of or instead of or in addition to those required, etc. "The state contracts for all of its other supplies under open, competitive bids. It would not consider for a moment the renewal of a flour contract or a meat contract for its institutions at increased prices without competition. Why should it be called upon to renew book contracts at advanced prices and with no remedy other than this proposal to empower the board of educationtwo members being a majorityto make such a contract? Why surrender to the book trust? "Since the publishers themselves refuse to renew at the prices enjoyed by them for the past six years, it seems to me that the state should not deliberately deprive itself of the right to force the book publishers into open competition for contracts. To eliminate the right of the state to act through its textbook commission in such a renewal is, in my judgment, a mistaken remedy. It could have but one result; an increase in the cost of textbooks. Textbook legislation should be in the interest of the patrons of our schools, rather than to afford a means of further exploitation of an already overburdened public."
