Students Visit Salem—

In order that students may study at first hand the processes by which the state laws are formed, more than 180 students of the Oregon normal school spent the day in Salem yesterday. Visits were made to the state legislature and to the several state institutions near the city. According to the faculty member in charge, Prof. J. B. V. Butler, head of the history department, this is the first visit of practically all the students to the state legislature and to the other institutions.

All work and no pay— That is how it is with the legislature now.

Already flax seed is being taken out by those who have contracted to sow it for the state flax industry, and nearly all the acreage needed has been signed up or spoken for. Better hurry, if you expect to grow flax for the state.

March is to be Oregon month for all the western railroads. They are to serve Oregon food, boost Oregon products generally, and advertise Oregon's advantages in various and sundry ways.

Now, if some one could get up a scheme to have the people of Oregon themselves boost their state, not only in March but for the balance of the year, Oregon would begin to get onto the map of prosperity and development in larger letters.

If Oregonians would boost Oregon like Californians boost California, we would very soon begin to have such a period of growth as to attract the favorable attention of the rest of the world.

Parrish Junior High School Grounds to Be Beautified

Without much trouble it is expected that the $300 necessary to correctly beautify the Parrish high school grounds will be secured, according to the announcement of Mrs. Nora Anderson, president of the Salem Floral society.

Already active work has been started by the society on the promise of $100 from various Salem citizens, who have pledged the money, and a planting plan is being worked out.

Because of the position and design of the new Parrish school it is desired that the grounds be dressed up as artistically as possible in order to make the best impression upon the visitors in the city.

Contributions can be made to William Burghardt, school clerk, or to Mrs. Anderson.

GARDEN CHEMISTRY

"In my garden laboratory," said Dr. George A. Baldpate recently to Edward Goodman, "I have been conducting some interesting experiments on the effects of various chemicals and stimulants on plant life. Today, for instance, every housewife knows that an aspirin tablet placed in a vase will restore faded flowers to freshness.

"One of the profitable sidelines of my work has been the production and sale of honey. I have always been handicapped by the fact that most flowers close at night. The old method of crossing the bees with lightning-bugs so that they could work all night has proved impractical for this very reason, namely, that while the bees, proverbially busy, kept awake, the flowers went to sleep. The problem, then, became that of keeping the flowers open after hours.

"This I solved by the simple expedient of planting a coffee-bean close to the seed of every honey-bearing flower. The chemistry of Nature transfigures the caffeine into the veins of the plant and an extraordinary wakefulness results.

"Great care, however, must be taken not to overdo this stimulation. In my first experiments I planted two coffee-beans to each flower-cutting, with the result that the matured plants were so nervous and trembly that the bees could not hold their footing. My honeysuckle orchard that year was completely ruined by nervous prostration, and twelve of my finest orange-trees developed cases
