strong upon me that the chameleon of the hostility, exaggerated by the physician's demand that she reveal Dicky's hiding place, meant to stage something unpleasant for him.

There was no necessity for my accompanying them that I could see and I would have remained in the hall but for the peremptory signalling nod which Mrs. Barker gave me. But I could not deny that my curiosity was kind of her summons, although I meant to keep Dr. Pettit in ignorance of my presence if I possibly could manage it.

Down the empty hall, through the dinner room, also empty, into the kitchen where the sulky maid gave us a startled, curious stare, through another door into a dark, short hall, I followed the angry physician and the imperturbable Mrs. Barker.

And when the lady, stopping before a dimly outlined door, said: "Here you are," in a low voice which was the essence of feminine yielding to peremptory masculinity, I flattened myself against the wall, and held my breath hoping the physician would not guess my proximity.

"Come out of there, Graham," Dr. Pettit called, his voice filled with menacing anger.

Mrs. Barker's Triumph

"There!" Mrs. Barker said composedly as she walked toward me, apparently unheeding the muffled pounding upon the door she had just closed. "He'll have a chance to cool off."

She reentered the kitchen, closing and locking the door, shutting off the room from the little dark hall, and paying no attention to the wide-eyed amazement of her sulky kitchen maid, she stood listening beside it for two or three minutes.

"You can't hear anything, can you?" she asked me.

"Not a sound," I answered, and, indeed, the two doors with the hall space between made the room beyond sound-proof. I was sure that Dr. Pettit had not yet ceased shouting and pounding—he was far too persistent a person to desist so soon—but he evidently might be in the "dungeon cell" of blessed "Pinafore" memory for any chance he might have of being heard.

"Then we'll go back to the hall," she said, imperturbable as ever, and I followed her back to her desk, with my respect and admiration for this mountain woman increasing with every step. I could visualize now the stories of the pioneer women of the country's early history, which before always had seemed somewhat apocryphal to me.

Mrs. Barker, I was sure, would have held her own before any savage Indian or panther.

"Where did you put him?"

"How long do you want me to keep him there?" she asked, as she reached her desk. "It doesn't make any difference to me, although he'll find it quite chilly."

"Where did you put him?" I breathed, and I fancy my face son, is the wife of Ray Wilson, a research chemist in the employ of the Western Electric company, New York City. Her third daughter, Edith Pierce, is now a junior in the University of Oregon at Eugene, and her youngest daughter, Lorraine, is a senior in the Salem high school. She also reared Clara Pierce, daughter of her husband by a former marriage.

There are three grandsons. There are three older sisters and one brother living. She was the youngest of nine children.

She was a devoted mother, giving her whole soul and energy to the rearing of her children, caring little for society. She was always an extremely strong woman until her first operation, in October, 1919, since which time she has suffered much. Since February 1st, 1924, she has had the attention of a private nurse, demanding constant care. All through her suffering and affliction she has been kind, hopeful, cheerful and helpful to the very last; she had an indomitable will, keeping track of her household affairs even after she could no longer walk or talk aloud, insisting that the bills for the home come to her, even paying her February household accounts with her own check.

She was a member of the Methodist church, becoming converted at Walla Walla in 1883. Her circle of friends was not large, but those who knew her best prized her friendship very highly. During the sessions when her husband, Walter M. Pierce, was state senator, she always came with him from eastern Oregon and was one of the well known ladies of the state senate. She was present the night her husband was inaugurated as governor, but was never able to enter the state house afterward.

Mrs. Pierce took a deep interest in her husband's political career, although she seldom appeared.

He was away from home much, both because of his interest in state affairs and because his farm and the cattle on the range took him. But there was the most complete harmony of interest between them. She had not been strong for some years prior to her severe illness, and Governor Pierce's solicitude for her at all times was extreme. During his campaign for the nomination two years ago he went to his home in La Grande and back to western Oregon many times just because he wished to see how she was getting along and to have a few hours with her. While the public did not know this, he took these night rides and put in many extra hours, some of them valuable for campaign work, because he could not bear to be away from her any more than was actually necessary, while she suffered as only he knew she did.

When Mr. Pierce was elected Governor the newspaper reporters soon found that Mrs. Pierce's illness was very serious and questioned the Governor about it. To them he confided the truth that it was a hopeless case of cancer, but he asked them to say nothing about it and to not mention her illness except when absolutely necessary. The newspaper men recognized the fine sentiment in the Governor's wish and respected it. To Mrs. Pierce the Governor spoke hopefully right up to the day of her death. Long after she realized that there was no hope he would not admit it to her, but talked of the time when she would be well again and they could go out together. When he was in the hospital last summer, for an operation, he found a nurse he considered especially competent and he took her from the hospital at a greatly advanced salary, to care for Mrs. Pierce. The expense of these two years has been tremendous, but that has not counted for a moment with him. To alleviate her suffering in the slightest degree, at any cost, was his object.

When affairs of state crowded upon him, he would say to a friend, "all this is nothing, if only my wife were well again."

CIVIL WAR VETS RANKS THINNING

Memorial services were held at McCornack hall Sunday in behalf of members of Sedgwick Post No. 10 of the GAR who died during the past year.

The principal address of the service was given by Ronald Glover, who stressed the important services these men had given in time of need and as useful citizens following the bloody strife.

"Three score years since the close of the Civil war and we have come again to pay tribute to the memory of him who shall have borne the battle and passed away 59 years after the close of the Civil war," he said.

"The citizen soldier, predicted as being unfit to return to private life, has shown his worth. From their ranks have been drawn presidents and men to fill other important offices of the nation. Many of them have been in quieter places, virtually the backbone of the nation."

Comrades of Sedgwick Post No. 10 who passed away were Benjamin Davis, William Stafer, Jacob Goode, T. M. Champiehn, J. B. Moyer, A. B. Huddleston, F. B. Southwick, J. B. Simmons, Ferdinand Kurz, L. D. Porter, Frank Lander and T. B. Eppert.

Rev. U. S. Crowder made an address in behalf of the Women's
