STRINGLESS BEANS ARE COMING BACK Salem is to have practically a new cannery this year;

This new department to be in the mammoth building east of the passenger depot of that company that was formerly the Southern Pacific hop warehouse.

Our growers can produce here a superior canning bean, and in "unlimited" quantities, using that term as commonly employed.

And, as the writer has said before, here is an opportunity for a man or group of men thinking in empires; for a man or men with vision—

This district grows a superior green bean, and it can be produced in large quantities on comparatively small acreage.

The wide world wants a superior salad bean, or what portion of the world does not feel the want can, by advertising and exploitation, be made to demand such an article of dietary and gustatory excellence.

Well, we are "on our way" again, with one of the world's greatest canning concerns putting in a bean canning equipment, and contracting a large acreage.

This is great news for our growers. Beans are a good succession crop. They come on as a suitable crop in our continuous harvesting program.

A PICKLE FACTORY FOR SALEM Salem is to have another manufacturing plant at once;

To be installed in the big building that was the Southern Pacific hop warehouse.

Salting will be done this year, also the packing of dill pickles, and perhaps of sweet pickles. In due course, this will be an immense plant, putting up pickles and salting cucumbers for shipment to other plants, to be further processed.

This is the kind of a manufacturing plant that is the most beneficial of all; caring for the increasing products of our soil; meaning new money every year, coming from long distances.

A GREAT MAN GONE We remember him first as the homeliest young man who ever came to Baker university to school—awkward, with flaming hair, stopped shouldered, a shuffling walk, as ungainly a youth as one would ever see; yet there was in that young man the elements of greatness.

He batched two years at one time with the writer of this article. We came to know him then, and have loved him since. As the years went by, fame came to him, but he was the same unassuming, wonderful character.

He was met many men but never met greater than William A. Quayle; lovable always, sweet always but with a will that knew no bounds. He simply forced his way by sheer power of his determination and ability. In his youth he never had an influential friend, nobody ever handed him a dollar. He arrived because there was in him the material out of which great men are made.

The death of this great bishop is a national loss, and all over America today tributes are being paid to his memory. When he became a broken reed after years of service he went back to the little town of Baldwin, Kansas, and lived there, waiting for the end, which came Monday.

LOOKS THAT WAY It may show narrow-mindedness, and all that, but when a person puts the "Ruhalyat" of Omar Khayyam in the list of books that have influenced him most, our regard for that person at once begins to wane.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

We confess it is hard to understand the type of mind of the thinking man who does not admire the "Ruhalyat." Omar Khayyam may have been a drunkard but had the finest poetic genius of any man who has ever lived. This may sound extravagant but a somewhat long lifetime interest in the little book of poems has convinced us that he has no equal. Every line of it is poetry, every line is a song, every line has beautiful imagery. There is nothing like it any where else. He never lets down. The most commonplace things become exalted by the wealth of his poetic ability. Clearly the writer of the above has not read Omar Khayyam carefully. It is common practice nowadays to refer to him as a drunkard and pass over his poems lightly but those who have stopped to take a drink at the well of his knowledge, find an inexhaustible supply of sparkling genius that brightens up the dull situation and makes it shine resplendently.

DEMOCRATIC HARMONY

After the election of Harding the democrats continued to fight each other and encourage factionalism. The result was that the party did not know it was in the last campaign. It simply played around the fringes without its presidential candidate ever getting his feet on the ground. Now the democrats are learning something. They are trying to get together. They are learning that only in unity and harmony is there strength. Factionalism is being submerged. The democratic party will be strong in the next election because there will be an inevitable reaction against the tremendous republican majority and the democrats will again present a solid front.

This is a two-party country. It is not good for one party to be strong and the other weak. They need to be fairly well balanced in order to keep each other in the straight and narrow way so that the harmony of the democratic party is not unwelcome as a national asset. It ought to be strong enough to exert a negative influence to be reckoned with.

NOT RECEIVED

The movie star who married the scion of a bygone nobility in France is not being received because they say her husband is unknown. There is no such thing as nobility in France, anyway, and any title claimed is pseudo. The man she married was said to be a former bartender in New York. That is at least as honorable an occupation, dishonorable as it is, as the alleged nobility of France follows. It is getting very nauseating to hear of France's nobility when that country has been a republic for half a century.

A QUEER CASE

Dr. H. C. Parker, the great geologist and scientist, is living quietly at a small hotel in Portland. Back of him is a wonderful career. Ahead of him are great possibilities, but today he stands on middle ground leading nowhere.

It is a strange case. No one will ever know why he left his home, his reputation and all the luxuries of life to lose himself in the world. There are conflicting stories told. There is no way of finding the truth. All that is known is that this great man threw away his greatness and became as the commonest of men. Here is hoping that he can come back. The world needs that sort of men. He is doubtless erratic, but we are accustomed to the eccentricities of genius, and overlook much.

NOT MUCH

The little tempest, hardly big enough to be called a tempest in the teapot, over the alleged secret societies in the high school, has been blown up. There never was anything to it. It was just simply that some people have to be everlastingly nagging the high school pupils.

The Salem high school is composed of as fine young people as you will find anywhere. They have their societies, they have their organizations, but they are not violating the law in any sense. They are simply upstanding young Americans, full of the joy of life, and they are going to take their

LENTE TALKS, THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST JOHN

Rev. ERNEST H. SHANKS, Pastor of the First Baptist Church MARCH 12, 1925 John 6:1-10. "The Bread of Life." Miracle of loaves and fishes. 1-14. Walking on the water. 15-21. Discourse on bread of life. 22-40. Key: "Bread of Life." Memory verses: 26, 32, 35, 40.

FEEDING the five thousand appeals to the imagination. Jesus took what they had, blessed it, gave it back and they all had all they wanted and enough to spare. The little lad got back more than he gave, and we fancy it was better than he gave. It were well to remember this and allow what we have to receive His sanctifying touch. Then they would take Him by force to make Him king. But He is not to be crowned that way. Love must find the way. How responsive He ever was to human need. "Walking on the sea," telling them about the true bread that came down from heaven. He was teaching them about the real spiritual bread. As the natural man must feed upon bread, so our spiritual natures must have "the true bread."

"Ye seek me not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat the loaves, and were filled." "My Father giveth you the true bread from heaven." "I am the Bread of Life: he that cometh unto Me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on Me shall never thirst." "This is the will of My Father. That every one that beholdeth the Son, and believeth on Him, should have eternal life."

Bread of the world in mercy broken, Wine of the soul in mercy shed, By whom the words of life are spoken, And in whose death our sins are dead. Look on the heart by sorrow broken, Look on the tears by sinners shed, And be Thy feast to us the token That by Thy grace our souls are fed.—HEBER.

place in the world without a smirch on their characters in any way. It is time to stop this back-biting and finding fault with high school students. They do not deserve it. They are entitled to the best, and the public wants them to have the best.

OH, PSHAW!

It is really pitiful for a man to go into a smaller town and try to ape metropolitan journalism. The Eugene Guard is a case in point. Eugene is a mighty fine town and is entitled to have its separate identity, but the Guard writes editorials entirely for the consumption of the Portland newspaper men. It doesn't function for Eugene at all. It is a bad practice, but probably the editor is too old to learn better. The Guard is always trying to make a point, thinking it will bring a smile from Portland. It misrepresents The Statesman on every possible occasion, but we regard that as a high compliment because if we won the commendation of the Guard we would think we were a palavering, time-serving sycophant.
