What has been declared to be "the first pearl of German-American poetry" was a song boosting Oregon and is now made public in this state for the first time. It was written by one of Ore-gon's earliest boosters who never saw the state but whose rousing publicity efforts induced many Americans of that time to make good their claim to the Oregon territory by actual settlement of the land. Interesting historical facts to this effect have been assembled by the Northern Pacific railway which this months is engaged in an Oregon advertising and publicity campaign throughout the East.

Conze was born near St. Louis, Mo., and just before enlisting in the war was conducting a private school in Milwaukee, Wis. for pupils of all ages meeting in separate classes and departments. The men meet in a great Bible class at the Bligh theater at the same hour. The evening church program will include special Scotch songs to be given by James P. Smart noted for his rendition of this type of music. Other musical features under the direction of Miss Whisler will From there he went to Alton, Ill., and joined a company of volunteers which was then forming and he was 28 years old when he fell in battle. Conze wrote a song in German about Oregon, which was printed in a history of Milwaukee, Wis., and by a strange coincidence a translation of this song now comes to Oregon, long after its author has been forgotten, through the interest of a Wisconsin man who is doing in 1925 what young Conze was doing in 1846-spreading the story of Oregon's attractions to the homeseeker.

Ye who no fields ha' sown, Ye fearless free hunters To lot of ease unknow. The stream of immigration From the East is drawing on, Your forests are dwindling-So, off to Oregon!

And ye who thirst adventure And ye who long for strife Eager to hunt and hazard, Who love the forset life, Gather 'round from every state From all the wide Union! All hail to hill and prairie! All hall to Oregon!

A thousand strong we're gathered Upon Missouri's bank, No matter what our station We're come from every rank, A thousand hearts are singing As with a single tone, The echoes reverberate. 'We're off for Oregon!"

Endless before us blooms Sweet scented the prairie, The forest tops are surging In ecstatic poesie, While over bridge and hollow We're stoutly pushing on To plant the starry banner In distant Oregon!

O these are not the hearts To quaver in the fight, Who when a monarch threatens Supinely flee the right; As freemen they march westward To claim the prize their own, As freemen they're maintaining In glory, Oregon!

Still, the energy expended in cussing fool laws might make you rich enough not to worry about
