WALTER CAMP EXPERT, DIES

day's session which was to approve changes in the intercollegiate playing regulations, the secretary was not in his place. After a brief delay the meeting opened without him. An hour later E. K. Hall, Dartmouth, chairman of the committee decided to investigate and after a telephone call to the Belmont brought the report "Mr. Camp's room does not answer." Mr. Roper and Mr. Langford were sent in search of the secretary.

Getting no response from Mr. Camp's room, Roper and Langford hurried to the office of J. R. Clark, assistant manager of the hotel. Together the three men forced the door and found the body on the bed. Dr. J. R. A. Lang, house physician, said Mr. Camp had died in his sleep of a heart attack. This was confirmed later by Dr. Thomas A. Gonzales, assistant medical examiner.

process of law as a result of the investigation into the death of young Billy McClintock.

"However," continued Mr. Crowe, "we have evidence, which in my judgment makes it necessary to hold Mr. Shepherd.

"I am prepared to file a formal complaint against him if it becomes necessary to keep him in custody."

Attorney William Scott Stewart said that his client "technically is entitled to discharge at this time," but rather than "precipitate a charge of murder, we want to give Mr. Crowe time to look carefully into the case."

Stewart pointed out that Shepherd voluntarily returned from New Mexico for the coroner's inquest into McClintock's death, had appeared voluntarily for questioning at any time and had never claimed his constitutional rights to resist examination.

BATTLE RESUME IS ANNOUNCED

black fleet lines, but the blue submarines made contact and started the engagement. Whether the blue defensive submarines were within the black fleet lines, however, was a moot point, for while the blue submarines reported within the 16 mile destroyer screen of the black fleet, the black fleet reported having contracted its line into a 10 mile radius and engaged in action against the submarines by its protective destroyers.

Conditions, the secret nature of which could not be divulged by the naval high command, caused termination of the problem at day light. The critique was opened by Admiral Robert E. Coontz, commander in chief of the United States fleet. He welcomed the officers from the Atlantic and Rear Admiral William C. Cole, chief of staff, then outlined the program. Vice Admiral Josiah S. McKean, commander of the blue fleet scouting forces, then outlined the movements of his defensive fleet in the engagement. He was followed by Rear Admiral Magruder of the scouting divisions. Rear Admiral Williams of the destroyer divisions, Rear Admiral Taylor of the control force, including submarines, and Lieutenant Commander H. Boynton, communication officer of the blue fleet.

New Law Will Influence Decision of Court Here

Influence of a new state drainage law, which goes into effect within a period of 90 days, will possibly have a bearing upon the decision of the drainage district in southeast Salem. The new law attempts to validate the governor's signature on the petition as representative of the board of control.

Regardless of what action is taken litigation will follow. It is stated that the introduction of the new bill at the last legislature providing for such validation was a tactful admission on the part of the proponents of the drainage scheme that there was some doubt of the acts of the petition being carried out. If this is true the county court would be merely inviting litigation which would have the effect of nullifying the court action.

Providing the law is effective, it is not known whether the legislature has the power to validate the signature of the governor in such an action.

Busy Business Girl Keeps Healthy By Dressing Sanely and Utilizing Safeguards Provided By Employers

Whatever indictments may be directed at the girl of to-day by women—and sometimes men—of preceding generations, they have to admit that she is a healthy young thing, remarkably free from all the gentle little ailments that afflicted the sweetly feminine person of their good old days. Physicians are virtually unanimous on this point.

Nowhere is there better opportunity for studying the health and physical condition of women than in the big insurance company. Thousands of women are employed in the company's offices and statistics are available on millions of policyholders.

Dr. Charles W. Crankshaw, director of the infirmary maintained by the Prudential Insurance Company at its home office at Newark, New Jersey, attributes the general good health of girls to the popularity of outdoor sports and the attendant freedom of the body from restrictive clothing.

"Apart from such an occasional exception," Dr. Crankshaw says, "I think our women's clothes have about reached perfection from a viewpoint of health and sanity. Women now have a chance to breathe correctly and nothing can beat good deep breathing as a fundamental exercise. The organs of her body are free to function properly. There is no pressure on the spine as was the case with the old-fashioned corset.

"There has been considerable opposition to women in industry on the ground that the pressure is too severe a strain on their potential maternity. Some working conditions have justified this fear. But our girls go through their daily work with very little interruption. The hours are short—not much longer than those of High School. There is no necessity for night study. The daily routine is such that undue fatigue is averted. A full hour is given at noon when the company furnishes an appetizing and wholesome lunch. The girls have an opportunity for rest or recreation after their meal. In the middle of the morning and again in the afternoon there is a five-minute rest period. Should a girl feel the need of extra rest or nourishment she is privileged to go to the rest room in the infirmary, where one of the nurses will take care of her, or to have additional milk provided by the company. Our women know they never need force themselves to work when they are not in their best condition.

"An insurance company is interested first and last and all time in prolonging life," continued Dr. Crankshaw. "We try to begin our work at home. We order the work of the home office so that the more than five thousand people housed under our roof about eight hours a day may have every chance of a happy life, which means a healthy life."

Shipping Experts Witness Trial of Oarless Lifeboat

LONDON, Mar. 14.—A lifeboat without oars, which it is claimed may be propelled even in rough weather by persons without previous training, was tried out here recently in the presence of shipping experts and representatives of the government. Because of the absence of oars the inventor, J. R. Fleming, contends that one of the chief difficulties of launching a lifeboat from a vessel in distress has been overcome.

The new type of lifeboat is propelled by the occupants, who have levers which they pull forward and backward, this action through a very simple gear causing a propeller to drive the lifeboat through the water. The boat used in the experiment had 42 occupants. With one man at each of the 8 levers it was possible to maintain a speed of three miles an hour, and with two men working on each of the levers a speed of six miles an hour was brought about, according to official announcement of Lloyd's agents who were present.

Representatives of the London Board of Trade, the British Corporation and 40 of the leading British steamship companies also witnessed the trout, which was reported a success.

Sea Travel May Become Cheaper and Pleasanter

LIVERPOOL, March 14.—The policy of the United States in restricting the inflow of emigrants under a quota system, coupled with high building costs, is likely to cause the development of a new branch of travel and the building of a new type of liner, according to Harold Sanderson, chairman of the White Star Line, writing in that company's magazine.

Mr. Sanderson says an extensive third-class business has been a potent factor in the development of fleets of the principal companies, culminating in super-liners of today with a standard of comfort for all classes unequalled in any other trade in the world.

"But," he continues, "the restriction on the emigration movement has so reduced the volume of travel that, coupled with high building and operating costs, the construction of further steamships of monster type in the near future is rendered problematic. Steamship companies may be expected to restrict their building

Craze for Bobbed Hair Brings Jobs to Women

LONDON, Mar. 14.—The women and girls of England are being absorbed back into industry far more quickly than the men and boys, according to recent statistics on unemployment. Hair dressing, owing to the bobbed hair craze, has given employment to a large number of young women who earn better wages than the men barbers because of the extra charges made for trimming bobbed locks. Men in London pay approximately 25 cents for a hair cut, while women pay double that amount.

Last spring there were 300,000 women among the unemployed of Great Britain, while today the number is something like 250,000. Although about 1,000,000 extra women and girls are now at work compared with the figures of the year before the beginning of the war, women and girls together do not represent one-quarter of the total number of unemployed. Government officials say there is every indication that the number of unemployed, both men and women, will be greatly reduced during this year.
