Stiles Are Conservative—Swinging from a somewhat fancy style, the cut of men's clothing has taken a conservative line, according to the information furnished by W. W. Emmons, proprietor of the Scotch Woolen Mills store. Cuffs, fancy pockets, belts, silk braids and other effects were in vogue, but the present day tendency is for a plain effect. The fancy style came into vogue following the World War, but during the war the plainest of clothes were worn. It can be said of the present men's styles are following snappy good tailoring lines.

OTIS SKINNER IS MARVELOUS ACTOR

Costumes and Scenic Effects Are Appreciated By Audience Last Night

By AUDRED BUNCH

A marvelous actor in a great role was Otis Skinner last night at the Grand theater when Spain came to the stage. It made one think hard of the big-little things when the episodes passed one by one that put the words: "Sancho Panza" on the lips of the now bawling, now twittering populace like nothing less than a sainted name.

The play opening on a roadside in the province of Andalusia on a balmy summer's eve, takes the action to the pavilion of the Duke of Barataria in its continuance the following day. The audience sat convulsed with mirth as the new goat-herd governor was initiated into his office. He is such a naive governor, and such a governor as the people will never again have, so solemn in his declaration that he prefers his advice from his sensitive donkey, Dapple, than from all the dukes and lords that can straggle onto the streets. Robert Rosaire takes the part of Dapple in one of the finest roles of the play—and Dapple is as dear to the hearts of the audience as to his faithful master who said: "goat-herd I am; but dirty I am not!" in answer to the taunts of the square. Dapple prances and parades, and snuggles his nose for apples in a surpassing manner and is a direct stage aid in some of the more pertinent maneuvers of the plot. The Cathedral scene was one of the loveliest moments the stage has ever afforded—with the ring of tapers burning silently about the Blessed Lady of Sorrows as the chimes sound in the blue gloom.

Mr. Skinner's characterizations develop the plot in a manner that is too natural to be spectacular, yet too amazing to be less. He is consummate on the stage—that incredible phenomena, the perfect actor. He gives his lines with such personality one forgets they haven't been his own from the beginning, and never from "Don Quixote" at all.

The costumes and terpsichorean features are abundantly colorful, adding zest and Old World paeanry to unforgettable scenes. A company of 40 players, dancers, and singers supported Mr. Skinner in this acclaimed piece of art last night which was brought to Salem under the management of Russell Janney.

Mr. J. W. Garner was happily surprised on his 79th birthday when all his children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren came with their dinners and spent the day.
