BIBLE THOUGHT AND PRAYER Prepared by Radio Bible Service Bureau, Cincinnati, Ohio. It promises will have their children memorize the daily Bible selections, it will prove a profitable heritage to them in later years.

RICHES HAVE WINGS.—Labor not to be rich; cease from thine own wisdom. For riches certainly make themselves wings; they fly away. Proverbs 23:4-5. PRAYER.—We thank Thee, O God, that we are fellow-workers with Thee in labor that builds not for time only but for eternity.

MORE AND MORE PROOFS

Our surplus of exports over imports for the current fiscal year is likely to total in value one billion four hundred million dollars—an increase of four hundred millions over the previous year—

That is, we are selling almost four and a half million dollars' worth more of our products every working day in the year than we are buying from foreign countries—

And this under a protective tariff which the yell leaders of the great importing firms were saying, while the present law was under consideration, would destroy our foreign commerce. Our foreign commerce is now the greatest in the history of the country, and growing constantly—

So nothing comes out as the propagandists of the importing firms predicted.

This corner of The Statesman of a few days ago contained the official figures showing that the wholesale prices of the staples range much lower in the United States than in either Great Britain or Canada. So our people, while enjoying the benefits of a protective tariff, have also the advantages of relatively low priced necessities of life.

There is another bugaboo of the free trade propagandists that is being smashed. These people have been claiming that the rehabilitation of those European countries so recently engaged in war depends upon an increase in the sale of their products to the United States and that, to that end, our tariff should be lowered, also that their debts to us cannot be paid except in goods, the most of the gold being in our possession.

These and other claims are shown to be groundless in a dispatch from London, published in the New York Journal of Commerce of March 18th in which it is shown that the excess of imports over exports in the British trade with this country had increased from £126,000,000 in 1923 to £165,000,000 in 1924; that is that the adverse trade balance against Great Britain had increased by $39,000,000.

The correspondent goes on to say that, while the trade balance between Great Britain and the United States had increased against Great Britain, the exchange situation had rapidly increased in Great Britain's favor. That, the writer says, is explained by the fact that the exchange between any two countries does not wholly depend upon the trade between them but that it is largely influenced by the trade of each with the rest of the world—

And what is true of Great Britain is true of other countries. Great Britain has profited through its trade with other nations, although it has lost in its net trade with the United States. The British have been able to settle their trade balance with this country with their profits from their trade with other countries, and also with the profits from their domestic trade, and other nations also have been able to pay us from the profits of their trade which is wholly independent of that with the United States. It therefore follows that we do not need to wreck our own prosperity by admitting foreign products at prices with which our producers cannot compete, in order to enable us to collect of debtor nations, nor yet to permit of their economic rehabilitation. The prosperity of any nation does not necessarily depend upon its trade with this country, but upon its internal trade and its trade with the other nations of the world.

It would be a strange thing if each nation must sell to us as much as it buys of us, and vice versa, while it deals with other nations according to their respective needs. The United States does not need to sacrifice its own high standard of prosperity in order to ensure the prosperity of those nations which have become indebted to us. Our debtors are under obligations to us because of our helpfulness and generosity—

And it would be a poor return for them to insist on our continuing our generosity to the point of our economic ruin—

And in fact this would not benefit them in the least.

JARDINE AND THE FARMERS

Secretary of Agriculture Jardine declares that the farmers need only to be let alone, and given time they will wear out their troubles.

"I have no panacea for agricultural relief," he emphasized, "and I don't believe that anybody has. The most painful period of readjustment is now over and prospects look much brighter to the farmer. There is real encouragement in the progress that has been made during the last two or three years. We can look to the future with confidence, but we must recognize that there are many phases of the agricultural situation that still challenge the best thought of the nation."

Of course there is something to that. Sometimes when men become ill they declare their illness will wear itself out. But every time they let it wear itself out it weakens their bodies, and the farmers by trying to wear out conditions waiting for economic readjustment. We have agricultural colleges and they are doing a wonderful work, but what they are teaching is production and the proper care of the soil. What the law can do is to provide avenues of distribution so that the farmer can sell what he produces.

We have in the Willamette valley the richest land in the world, and yet the farmers here are complaining as loudly as anywhere. We are telling them how to raise better crops and it is right for us to do so, but at the same time the government must not stand with hands off, allowing the farmers to find their own markets and to make their own cooperative plans.

The government is an agency and the administration of that agency ought to help the farmers the same as the manufacturers and the railroads are helped. In the Willamette valley we are having a great revival of better crops, better plowing, better planting, better seed, with the result of higher class goods and higher class products, but governmental help must be extended to find a market for these greater things we are about to raise.

YOUTH AND AGE

Youth lives on its illusions; age is very apt to live on its delusions. However, there is a happy medium and between the two are the people who really live. Youth is false and happy, and yet youth has its troubles—a lot of them. Very few youthful people realize how happy they are when they are young. It is only when they get old and look back that they realize their happy years.

It is a good idea for old people and young people to mix more. The reason their tastes are supposed to be dissimilar is because each goes its own way; youth in the freedom of its years and age in the responsibility of its years. But the youth that lives happy-go-lucky is very apt to lack in serious mindedness when it gets older, while the aged person who lives entirely in retrospect and bemoaning the decadence of the times is mighty apt to be a confirmed grouch. The great task of all of us is to find happiness. We rush through the years hoping that at the end of the rainbow we shall find happiness, and we are always trying to catch up with the rainbow. As a matter of fact what we need is to learn contentment—not smugness, but contentment. We need to make the best of what we have and thank the Lord it isn't worse.

Youth pays too little attention to its body; age pays too much. Youth is careless and takes chances with exposure. Age is so desperate about a draft that it often makes itself a nuisance. We should care for our bodies intelligently, but we should not spend all our time for creature comforts. It was Edison who said the body existed to carry the brain around. That idea means that we must keep as good a body as we can in order to take care of the brain, but we must not spend all our time watching out for aches and pains; neither must we neglect the aches and pains we have, as youth is very apt to do.

NEWSPAPERS AND CRIME

There is always more or less discussion about the newspapers and crime. The complaint is that the newspapers handle too much crime. They do. The reason they do is because there is too much crime, but we do not believe there is any more crime in proportion to the population than there ever has been. In fact we think there is less.

The fact that a great newspaper thrives without reporting crime is pointed out. It is a wonderful example of success for a great newspaper, but neither does that great newspaper report deaths, although certainly there would be a protest if a local newspaper did not report the deaths.

Newspapers report crime because it is unusual. They don't like it, but the people are entitled to know what is going on in the world, and the criminal class furnishes the information in that line to a larger extent than anyone desires.

IT LOOKS ALARMING

Just why the three railroads running through the northwest should have canceled their coast differentials is hard to understand. Pacific coast interests have no idea what caused the change of front. An effort is being made at once to find out what is in. But if there is to be a surrender before the final arguments are made there is no prospect of better rates on April 23, as promised.

The hearings on this proposition were held two years ago and on February 6 a differential of 7 cents a hundred pounds on Montana grain, which was intended to cross the Pacific ocean, as compared with that consumed in the Pacific northwest, was justified.

The only cure of so-called ingrowing toe nails is to have a straight line inside made in a way that it will not cramp the toe.

The appointment of Senator Kinney to OAC is a particularly happy one. Mrs. Kinney is a woman of practical affairs but with just enough sentiment to make her useful in an educational way. She will take a personal interest in everything she does connected with the agricultural college.

ANOTHER ILLUSION GONE

Many people spend considerable time with their ingrowing toe nails. They clip them carefully when they can, and when roundly of volume comes with the years they get somebody else to keep them clipped. But nearly everybody we notice has trouble with ingrowing toe nails.

Here comes the shattering of another illusion. We are told there is no such thing. What is known as ingrowing toe nails is caused by the pressure of ill-fitting, or ill-shaped shoes against the side of the toe. We are actually warned against cutting out the edges or corners of the nail or trying to influence the growth or shape of the nail by scraping it.

SAP & SALT

Baldness is unavoidable, but whiskers, thank heaven, are optional. Women is a creature that men either run away with or run away from. Few people know what they want, and that explains why they don't get it. Any fool can attract attention, but only folks with brains can hold it.
