

Announcement

Owing to a 50 per cent increase in rent under our new lease, we find it desirable to share our store space with an optical firm that is now locating a branch establishment in Salem.

The arrangements made are advantageous in every way, we believe, and after making some necessary changes our available store space will be practically the same as it is now. The main entrance will be used by both firms after April 1, and we will use the three show windows on State street for display purposes.

A portion of our remodeled Fixture room will be used for Radio Display and Demonstration. We are glad to announce this additional equipment as we believe it will prove a convenience to our many radio friends and to an increasing number of radio fans.

We cannot avoid a certain amount of noise and disorder during the alteration period but we shall remain open for business and, after the work is completed, we shall be able to serve you more efficiently.

Ella McMunn Thinks Dr. and Mrs. Clement Had Better Cut Out Vienna

She Comes to This Conclusion After Thinking of the Things She Wants Them to See for Her

By ELLA McMUNN
I see by the paper that Doctor and Mrs. L. C. Clement are planning a trip abroad. I like the idea, except about stopping off at Vienna to attend a clinic. I don't know much about the place, which is my own fault of course, as for several years we had a picture card concerning it, which came out of the Arbuckle coffee. But I never pester my head about learning anything not needed at the moment. My private opinion is that the doctor will find those cannibals over there removing a goltre by tightening a hemp rope around it, and going after your appendix with a couple of sharp stones. Now my recollection of Vienna bread is that it is a long loaf, baked until you could feel a robust cow with it and covered with sand and gravel, and when, during the war, I heard a man in the bank tell another man that his student son at Vienna could scarcely make his way through the streets without his progress being impeded by children crying for BREAD, I, knowing all about Vienna bread, was moved to tears, feeling that starvation was indeed upon them when they could cry for THAT bread.

I wish they would keep a journal, day by day, and have it published when they return. I should not want them to put in their stuff as "political unrest," and "development," and "economic conditions." I don't care two cents for such things. What I want to know is just exactly what they had for breakfast and how it was cooked and what it cost; and was there enough cover on the bed, and similar important things.

But I should prefer that they went immediately to England, Holland and the other places mentioned, so as to be there at the time of the blooming of flowers, and to just soak up impressions. For one thing I want to hear all about "quaint English gardens" and what makes them "quaint," and what the varieties of flowers are. You know they are strong for calling things "nosegays," and "pooys," and many names are not those we are familiar with, although the flowers may be the same. I should like also to hear if they are pestered with moles, gophers, slugs, aphids, worms above and on the surface of the ground, and what the varieties of wild flowers are.

Indeed, when I think of all I want them to see for ME, I think that they had better "cut out" Vienna entirely.

CHAPTER 419

WHAT CLAIRE DISCLOSED IN THE BLISS'S APARTMENT

Claire rose with alacrity at my suggestion that we look over the Bliss apartment to which Dicky had just brought us.

"I'll be glad to give it the once-over. It's a nifty little dump, I think," she said, and I noted that she had returned to the slangy diction of my first acquaintance with her.

The hours of our association at the Barker house had given me a new and more pleasant impression of her language, which had been eminently correct. But she was patently off-guard now, to give her performance of the previous half hour its most plausible excuse.

Our inspection did not take very long as the apartment consisted of but three rooms and an alcove off the living-room. The single bedroom was roomy for an apartment, and contained the ubiquitous twin beds and two dressing cases.

The living-room alcove at first sight seemed a part of the larger room, with a comfortable couch, and a rooney chest of drawers, which would have delighted the heart of a collector. But Claire's sharp eyes soon discovered the real use of the alcove.

"Behold the guest room," she said running an inquisitive finger along the framework of the couch. "This turns into a bed at night, and when the candles and that wonderful piece of old pottery are off that chest it makes a spiffy bureau. But here's one guest who declines to use it. It'll make a fine place for the Dick-bird to roost—Isn't that what Mrs. Underwood calls him? And I know you'll let me share the bedroom with you, won't you? Here is even a door for his room."

"It's the Canary's Chirp."

She pulled out an immense screen from where it had been folded against the wall, and began to open it with the eagerness of a curious, spoiled child who must meddle with every new thing. I told myself that was exactly what she was, and I suspected that she had looked upon Dicky as a novel and fascinating toy, whose mental wheels she liked to see revolve.

"Never mind that now," I said. "We haven't time. Just look at this table, will you? Isn't it a dear?"

I had hard work to keep a certain tart crispness out of my voice. The nonchalant manner in which she had decided that Dicky should occupy the alcove while she shared the other room with me irritated me. It was exactly the arrangement I myself had planned, but I had the feeling that purposely or through carelessness, she was arranging things according to her own fancy without troubling herself to ascertain my possible wishes.

She opened the screen a little farther, pushed it back untidily without closing it again, then crossed to where I was standing over a wonderful old mahogany drop-leaf table. The cozy living-room held nothing which was not pure colonial, either antique or reproduction, except those two essentially modern articles, a tea wagon and a phonograph, but the table was easily the gem of the collection.

"I suppose it's the canary's chirp," she said with a disparaging look at the piece of furniture over which I was breaking the tenth commandment, "but I can't cheap a single cheap over antiques. To my mind this room looks like a morgue."

Mudge Is Dismayed.

Her glance roved over the rush-bottomed, straight chairs and rockers which appealed so strongly to me, and which I knew must have been the result of long, patient and discriminating search upon the part of the fortunate owners of them. Then she said amusedly:

"But you're daffy about them, aren't you?"

"I fancy that describes my feeling," I returned, trying hard to make my voice good-humoredly indifferent. To express my enthusiasm, almost my veneration, for the lovely old things in the Bliss living room to this girl with her crude viewpoint was a waste of time and effort.

"Well, I'll take a comfortable rocker that I won't be afraid of breaking," she said laughingly, and followed me to the kitchen, which after a swift, comprehensive survey of its contents filled me with admiration—and dismay.

It was in that condition of immaculate order only to be described as spick and span, and its every appointment spoke of an exquisitely dainty and fastidious mistress. I found myself visualizing her dismay at the thin veil of dust which during her two weeks' absence had covered the porcelain top of her work table.

But it was not the exquisite cleanliness and order of the kitchen which dismayed me. I flattered myself that I could return it to its mistress in equally good condition. But except for the cups and bowls of heavy yellow ware used in preparing food, there was not a single piece of what household

SPIRIT OF PEOPLE GAINED DECISION

Dr. W. H. Brown Tells Why Marion County Selected for Demonstration

Speaking before members of the Marion County Health association, in session yesterday, Dr. Walter H. Brown, director of the Marion County Child Health demonstration, said, in part:

"I have often asked why the directors of the Commonwealth Fund of New York City, selected Marion county and Salem for its fourth great five-year program of child health, in competition with 28 cities of the west.

"I might say that the deciding factor in selecting Marion county was the spirit of the people. After visiting the 28 cities in 10 western states, I found I liked the people of Marion county, because you folks have a wonderful spirit that I did not find elsewhere.

"I saw from your schools and from attending a meeting in Salem, that you had a most wonderful spirit of cooperation, a spirit much finer than I found in many communities.

"Four school officials stand out as deeply interested in the health of children. This refers especially to Mary L. Fulkerson, superintendent of county schools and George W. Hux, superintendent of the Salem schools.

"Another thing I found in Marion county that impressed me was that your health associations, county and state, were all working in harmony, something that I did not always find in the 10 states I visited."

Referring to the work of the Marion County Child Health demonstration, Dr. Brown said:

"We do not replace any health agency now in the field. We work with and through the constituted health authorities of the county. We assist Dr. C. E. Cashatt, county health officer, Dr. William B. Mott, city health officer, Dr. D. R. Ross, school physician and Dr. W. H. Byrd, city physician, in protecting the health of the people of the county.

"From my past experience I can assure you that they will become just as interested in health as they are interested in other matters."

LEVENS WILL GIVE TALK BEFORE CLUB

Salem Chamber of Commerce to Hear New Chief of Prohibition Dept.

Members of the Chamber of Commerce will have an opportunity Monday of hearing W. S. Levens, state prohibition commissioner, who recently replaced George L. Cleaver.

Mr. Levens is an Oregon-born man and is going onto his new job with the avowed purpose of enforcing the prohibition amendment, providing the people want it enforced. He has been on the new job since the meeting of the state legislature, and according to reports is coming along merrily.

A biographical sketch shows that Mr. Levens was born at Baker, Or., graduated from the Yale law school at New Haven, Conn.; was in Alaska in 1897, returned to Oregon at a later date and served as police judge at Baker.

He has also served three terms as district attorney of the eighth judicial district.

He is a member of the Al Kader Shrine, life member of the Elks lodge at Baker, member of Pythias, IOOF, and of the Woodmen of the World.

Movement Under Way To Buy Picture

A plan to keep in the state Theodore Gogoux's painting of the historic day at Champog when Oregon was saved for the Union has been suggested by George H. Himes, curator of the Oregon Historical society, who wishes to see the painting purchased and presented to the state by popular subscription. The picture was exhibited in the state house in Salem during the last legislative session, but strict cutting of appropriations prevented the state from purchasing the picture.

The daughter of one of the 52 Oregon pioneers, who on May 2, 1843, participated in the historic gathering, has promised to pay the last $1000 of the $10000 which must be raised by Oregon if her people want to keep the picture which commemorates one of the greatest days in her colorful history.

Theodore Gogoux's quaint, studios figure, who worked more than four years on the picture he considered his masterpiece, is 76 years old and feeble health. He is at present in Los Angeles with a son, Theodore Gogoux Jr., and F. G. Gogoux of New York, another son, is in Portland in charge of the painting. It is being shown at the U. S. National bank and Mr. Gogoux, because it is his father's chief longing that the state of Oregon should want his masterpiece enough to keep it here, is endeavoring to interest the public in buying the picture.

Bits For Breakfast
Another linen mill—
The second one for Salem.
That is what the proposition of Mr. Sanson means—

Because the people of Salem, assisted by their friends of Albany, Silverton, Eugene, Portland and other valley towns, and the money of Mr. Sanson and his associates, will put over the $600,000 proposition.

And the $600,000 proposition will grow naturally and speedily into a gigantic concern.

The Miles' mill, starting at $150,000, will become a $5,000,000 proposition before many years.

These mills, built on the right lines, and managed by conservative men, will make money from the jump, and big money as soon as they get well organized. Then they will grow from the inside, and with all the help they need from the outside, too. Good linen mill stock will be as good as government bonds, and will yield larger returns.

Silverton offers to help Salem get this linen mill with $50,000 stock, and Albany with $50,000 and up. Salem should be thankful for having such good neighbors.

It would be perfectly safe for any farmer of the Salem district to plant flax, without any contract, if he is able to store it and hold it. It will improve 10 per cent in value for being held a year, and slightly for several years. And it will not deteriorate at all. Surely, by next year, there will be retting and scutching plants at several points. There should be such plants for each 1000 to 2000 acres of flax.

POLING STRESSES GYPSY CHARACTER

without the knowledge of God's plan for your life. Your house is built on the sand, and Jesus Christ said such a house is doomed to fall. Faith is the thing that gives you courage. It gives you heart to build big. When you work according to the knowledge of God's will, faith operates automatically. Love is the greatest of all things. When everything else fails a man, love still holds. When love inspires a man's conduct, Samuel, 6:10-11, by giving Him nothing under the heavens can beat him. He will fight and work for love's sake when all other motives have failed.

Mr. Poling delighted the congregation last night by teaching the audience two choruses of songs he himself had composed. One was "Carry On." The author was inspired to write this by the war-time phrase of the British, "Carry On." The other song is entitled "Jesus Still Cares for You." The writing of this was suggested by a touching incident in the past evangelistic experiences of Mr. Poling.

The subject of Mr. Poling's sermon on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock will be "Sheep." His Sunday night sermon will be entitled "Yellow Gold."

When you can turn your duties into pleasures, you have solved the problem of happiness.

Revival Services Will Be Continued Next Week

Rev. Mr. Acheson concluded the first week of the three weeks' revival campaign by a strong message upon the subject of "Religion in the Home," making an appeal to fathers and mothers first to take Christ into their hearts in a personal living way and then to take the ark of God into their homes, as did Obadiah in Second

Isaiah, 6:10-11, by giving Him the first consideration. It not only pays from a physical standpoint, but we owe it to those around us. No one remains still except a dead person. We either go forward or backward, and not only that, but we carry others with us. One of the greatest means said the pastor of establishing proper relationships in the home is by the use of the family altar.

At the close of the service the call was given to all those who had already established the family altar in their homes and those who, by the help of God, would do so tomorrow morning. The majority of the audience went forward shaking hands with the minister as a token of their attitude.

Each evening has shown a growing attendance and a keener interest in the meetings. If this increasing interest continues, and we believe it will, the success of the campaign is assured. Services will be held Sunday at 11 and 7:30 o'clock, and will continue throughout the week at 7:30, excepting Saturday evening. An invitation and warm interest awaits all who can attend.

It requires a lot of cleverness to so hide your faults that your neighbors think you have none.
