With the crest of the week already reached socially the gowns and millinery worn by the women at various attractive affairs have been the source of much admiration. At the French Shop the throngs of customers, attracted, perhaps, by the invitingly arrayed windows, have made this exclusive shop a virtual social center in itself.

Among those gathering for Madame Buffe's large spring opening this season, which is proving a superlative show in both gowns and millinery, have chosen the smartest of color for their costumes. Those provoking the most ardent admiration seem to be such big favorites as poudre blue, Patriarch, radiance, Terragon (green), and Conch shell.

Lace and rose combine in the lovely, drooping brimmed hats that seem just made for the afternoon tea.

SILAGE CROPS BY FARM CROPS

spring planted, but both peas and barley are quick maturing crops and they make a crop ready for the ensilage cutter in a surprisingly short time after seeding.

Peas and barley have yielded 50 per cent more silage than corn at the Union experiment station and the cost of the silage per ton has been much less.

For the coast counties, results at the Astoria experiment station indicates that peas and oats are better than any other silage crop. Peas and oats have yielded about one ton per acre more than oats and vetch.

March seedings at Astoria have yielded about a ton more than April seedings and these in turn yielded a ton per acre more than peas and oats planted in May. Early planting pays, according to those results. From 90 to 120 pounds of peas and 50 pounds of oats to the acre makes a good combination. The crop is ready for cutting when the oats are in the hard dough stage. The cutter should be adjusted so as to cut the crop in short lengths and good packing is necessary to exclude air. It is usually advisable to add a little water during the cutting process. The peas should be inoculated and seeded immediately so that the inoculation will not dry out.

Peas are the most dependable annual legume in the coast counties for either hay or silage. Sunflowers for Frosty Sections. Much has been written about sunflowers. Some dairymen loudly proclaim them the most valuable of crops, and others just as emphatically threaten to shoot the man who mentions them.

They are undoubtedly less palatable than corn, but nevertheless are a dependable silage crop in sections with a short or a very cool growing season. This includes the central Oregon country and the Blue mountains. They give tremendous yields under favorable conditions. In sections where corn will only yield four or five tons of silage per acre, sunflowers are ashamed of themselves if they do not make over 10 tons. Because of their dependable yields, the cost per ton of growing sunflowers is the lowest of any silage crop, so a person can afford to take a slightly lower feeding value.

The earlier the sunflowers are seeded the better they will yield as a rule. Seedings made in April in Montana at an elevation of 4000 feet yielded 39.7 tons per acre; one month later with the seeding dropped the yield to 36.3 tons and when planted in June the yield was 22 tons. Generally speaking, the sunflower can be seeded just as soon as the ground is warm.

Sunflowers may be seeded with an ordinary grain drill by stopping up some of the holes and putting the rows about 30 inches apart. From 6 to 8 pounds of seed are needed per acre.

In Wallawa county some excellent results are being obtained with an earlier maturing variety called Japanese Black Seeded sunflowers. These yield less than the Mammoth Russian, but are more leafy and are said to be more palatable.

Sunflowers make the best silage when cut before the seeds reach the hard dough stage. If cutting is delayed until the hard dough stage the silage is not so palatable as that cut earlier and some trouble may be experienced in getting cows to eat it.

A large number of farmers in both eastern and western Oregon use sunflowers to fill in the vacant hills in their corn fields. This crop grows much faster than corn and is excellent for this purpose.

Sunflowers can be expected to yield at least 50 per cent more than corn and in the colder parts of the state from two to three times as much as corn. They will grow in cooler weather than corn and are more resistant to frosts.

What About Alfalfa Silage?
When other silage crops fail and a man has a fine field of alfalfa, he frequently turns a speculative eye from the empty silo to the green alfalfa. Many farmers have tried filling their silos with this crop.

These people have usually found that the expense of filling the silo with alfalfa was scarcely justified, for the same amount of alfalfa turned into hay would have been nearly as valuable. Alfalfa doesn't make the same sweet smelling silage that corn does. Alfalfa silage is distinctly sour. It is improved if mixed with straw or with some other silage crop.

When continued rain threatens to ruin the hay crop it pays to run the alfalfa into the silo. Under ordinary conditions, however, the hay will give about as many pounds of milk as the silage and it is much less work. The same applies to both red and sweet clover, though the latter will still make fair silage when it has grown too coarse for hay. Some Wallawa county farmers have tried a mixture of sweet clover and rye and have had fair success. One farmer in Crook county has made and fed sweet clover silage for several years.

Other Silage Crops
Almost everything that grows has been made into silage at one time or another, including all kinds of weeds. If a farm supports a luxuriant stand of Canadian thistles along with a silo, the two can be combined and the result will be the only known use of this pest—and they make a lot of feed of fair quality. The same is true of very weedy stands of grain. Russian thistle silage pulled many Montana and Dakota farmers through the lean years of grain crop failures.

Straight wheat or rye silage has often been used. If rye is chosen for a silage crop, the Rosen variety is recommended because it is a particularly rank growing variety. Winter wheat will usually make more tons per acre than spring wheat in any part of the state except the irrigated districts. Any grain crop is best cut for silage just as the grain is hardening and before the leaves begin to dry.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied.—It's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy soft and beautiful.—Adv.
