SILAGE FOR STEERS AND SHEEP
alone ration. The silage fed steers not only made better gains but also put on a better finish and were more desirable market cattle in the end than those fed on hay alone. This test showed that each pound of silage fed reduced the hay eaten one-half a pound. The daily cost per head on the steers fed on hay alone was 13 1/2 cents and on those fed hay and silage the cost was 15 2-3 cents, or $2.78 more for the 120 day feeding period. However, the difference in gain more than offset this. In putting these results in terms of returns for feed, Professor E. L. Potter, head of the Oregon Agricultural college department of animal husbandry, says, "A 1000-pound steer costing 7 cents, fed for 120 days on hay alone and sold for 8 cents would return $7.63 a ton for the hay after paying all expenses including labor and interest. Under similar conditions a steer fed hay and silage would return $8.73 a ton for hay and $6.58 for the silage. The silage fed steer, however, would be a better steer than the hay fed steer and if the hay fed steer brought 8 cents the silage fed steer would bring a quarter more, in which case he would return $9.44 a ton for the hay and $7.57 for the silage. These figures apply to two-year-old steers." Corn or peas and bald barley silage gave best results in fattening. Sunflowers as a rule are not rated at more than 80 per cent as valuable as corn for fattening purposes.

There never was a time when community interests were so interdependent on each other as now. Every successful business in Salem becomes a distinct asset to every other business in the city. Conversely every unsuccessful business becomes a common liability to all the others. The real standard of progress is the high average of success which may be maintained. It is for this reason that when a new business starts, the entire community is interested in knowing the factors which point toward success. The community interests concerned are as vital as the interests of the proprietors or stockholders. Salem will be pleased, therefore, to learn that the Courtesy Cleaners which opened for business at 785 Highland avenue, under the management of W. L. Bulgin and A. B. Tweed starts out as a new concern from the ground up. A new fire-proof hollow tile and concrete building erected expressly for this firm is equipped with new machinery of the latest and best designs which will enable the proprietors to handle their business in the most satisfactory manner to their customers. Every safety precaution is installed; the business is located outside the high rent district which enables the management to reduce prices to its customers and share with them the advantage. The proprietors are young men of experience in their line and are full of energy and pep necessary in conducting a successful business. One of their leading features will be a monthly contract service at the low rate of $4 per month per individual. This includes cleaning all your clothes weekly, repairing, etc. It is worth while knowing that extensive experimentation has shown that regular weekly cleaning and pressing a suit adds 25 per cent to its durability, in addition to the added appearance of the owner. The Courtesy Cleaners are opening with every indication pointing to a most successful and prosperous business.

Meal Checks Instead of Money Reduce Beggars
BERLIN, March 7.—An effective method of getting rid of professional beggars has been devised by the Berlin Women's club. It has issued books of coupons in denominations of five and ten pennings, which Berlin families can purchase with a view to handling these meal checks to beggars. The beggar takes them to the municipal district welfare office of his district, whereupon he is given a free meal. At the same time his case is looked into by district welfare workers. Professional beggars never come again to a house in which they receive a meal check instead of cash. In fact, the sign furnished to such families for display and reading, "Alms are here given only in the form of meal checks," is usually enough to scare them away.
The fire was of unknown origin as no one was in the house at the time. * * * the children having gone to a nearby coulee to play and Mr. Hudson to a potato which was hid by a hill between from his view—Pioneer Press.
