"I just wanted to tell you about Walters dog," she said. "He's a mixed breed, a Spitzfoundland. Walter says, but bright-my land! Walter uses him to hunt rabbits with but Laura—that's his name -yes, I know he's a he, but I always told my sister Laura that if I had a daughter she should be named after her and I didn't, and the dog was the best I could dowell, anyway, Laura does all the hunting. Walter just sits on a log and Laura chases the rabbits up to him.

"Last week Walter was in town visiting you-so he says-and one morning I thinks to myself, 'Sarah, you old fool, let's take that old fish-rod over there and go over to Colby's Pond and catch me a nice trout for dinner. Soon's I come out of the house Laura began to yelp and shake himself all over, I suppose because I had on Walter's shooting jacket. 'No, Laura, old boy,' I says, 'it ain't no use your coming along with me because I ain't going hunting. But he just raced off ahead of me. There was no stopping him. And when I got over to the Pond, what do you suppose?" "Well," we hazarded, "We suppose that Laura was in the pond, "No, dearie," Marie replied, chasing the trout ashore." "He's no such fool," said Mrs. Traprock with a scorn that plainly
