Nature has fixed a life cycle for everything, animate or inanimate. Even the mountains are subject to this law of change. In her wonderful laboratories Nature is today preparing the materials which will enter into the merchandise of the future. The food, clothing, furniture, machinery, tools, everything needful and useful for the future comfort, happiness and necessities of the human race are being formed from the dust of the earth and stored in the great warehouses of Nature. Likewise, everything now in use is on its journey back to the dust. Human wisdom, based upon past experience, dictates that the life of usefulness of every article be extended as far as possible, so that when worn out past its stage of usefulness in one form the material may be salvaged and converted into some other form and thus extend its term of usefulness to the race. It is the mission of the junk house to salvage discarded worn out and broken articles, sort out and classify the various parts and get them back into an extended period of usefulness.

The distribution of the products of farm and factory forms an important and necessary link in the chain of commerce connecting the producer and consumer. It is the factor which assures the consumer of a constant, regular supply of desired quality of the article wanted and also assures the producer of a sure market for his product. The small producer is unable to meet quantity demands. Many small producers, through such an organization as the Pacific Fruit and Produce Co., are able to supply quantity demands of the market to the advantage of all concerned. This company, with headquarters in Portland, has many branches all over the Pacific coast country. It is distinctly a distributor of fruits and vegetables. It brings a ready market to every producer, large or small, in its territory and is thus able to meet market demands of retailers satisfactorily to their trade requirements. It performs a distinct, necessary and valuable service to its special field of feeding the people.

COLLEGE MAN GIVES DIRECTIONS
rows can be made so the crowns will be set down six or eight inches below the surface of the ground.
If manure is not applied in the fall, it would be a good plan to put a good coating of manure in the trenches underneath the crown and then to put an inch or so of soil on top of the manure, setting the crowns in the rows two to two and one-half or three feet apart. If the soil is inclined to be very rich the plants will make an extensive growth the first year and later on will soon occupy the place in and between the rows. Only a small amount of soil should be placed over the crowns after they are set. The remaining dirt should be thrown up to the plants as the stalks continue to increase in height. Good cultivation should be given all summer in order to preserve moisture and to cause the plants to make as rapid growth as possible.

One hundred plants should be sufficient for the use of the average family.
