Tornadoes Seldom Stray Beyond Central West

WASHINGTON, April 18.—The vagaries of tornadoes, one variety of which recently snuffed out upwards of 800 lives in the middle west, have almost completely baffled the researchers of science. The suddenness with which they strike have made scientific study extremely difficult.

Prof. William J. Humphreys, of the weather bureau, describes a tornado as "a violent rotating storm of small dimensions." The chances are, he says, that not once in 1,000 years would a tornado hit the same spot twice. The name tornado originally was applied to a violent thunderstorm on the coast of Africa. The variety of storm now called by that name, however, is peculiar to the Mississippi valley region of the United States, and rarely occurs in any other part of the world. Dr. Humphreys' records show that it does not occur west of Denver; is found only occasionally in southern Canada; is rare in eastern part of the United States, and is not destructive in or east of the Allegheny mountains, except in Alabama and Georgia.

OVER 700 TWINS IN THIS COUNTY

List Continues to Grow and 350 Sets Are Officially Registered

The census taking of the twins between the ages of 4 and 20, that live in the county, is at last finished. The exact number of twins listed in this census has not been finally tallied, but it is close to 350. Which means that there are approximately 175 pairs of twins of school age in the county. It is probably safe to estimate the number of adult twins to be found to the county, as about the same as children, or roughly speaking, 700 twins in Marion county. The exact number of twins of school age will be recorded in an early edition of this paper, together with some other interesting information concerning them. Below is the last of the list of children to be collected.

ANOTHER IS HELD FOR GRAND JURY

Frisco Edwards Pleads Not Guilty; Presence is Easily Explained

Frisco Edwards was arraigned in justice court Saturday and entered a plea of not guilty to a charge of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, furnished bail after waiving preliminary hearing and was bound over to the grand jury. Edwards told Brazier C. Small, justice of the peace, he was employed at the skating rink a few weeks ago and was leaving with the proprietor, Mr. Klett, when he was called to another machine in which there were two girls and a number of men. He was offered a ride back to the city, refused, and started for the Klett machine, which had already started back to the city. He then returned to the first machine and owing to its crowded condition, sat on one of the doors during a very short ride. It was not until later, Edwards said yesterday, that he even knew the two girls in the machine were under age. It was dark at the time and he had no opportunity to see them. He did not ask either for her age. Edwards is anxious for an early investigation by the grand jury in order that he will be completely exonerated. It was not until his arrest that he was aware that being in company with a girl or girls under 18 after 9 o'clock at night was sufficient, under the law, to be classed as contributing to the delinquency of a minor.
