IRON WORKS ARE PRIDE OF SALEM
W. W. Rosebraugh Iron Works Are a Leading Salem Industry

Iron workers form an indispensable factor in the development of the industrial life of a state. To meet the demand W. W. Rosebraugh established his iron works in Salem 14 years ago. Here he supplies the demand for either cast or wrought iron work. His specially designed fruit stove is the acme of economy in operation and the maximum in service. 200 of his wrought iron house furnaces were sold last year in Portland alone. 400 of his cast furnaces are now ordered for the current year. Smoke stacks, both pressure and storage tanks and road machinery are made here. 18 to 20 men are employed and the annual output is around $50,000. The noise of this institution is confined entirely within the four walls of the shops. The business is a smooth running, noiseless machinery which produces results. It has the confidence of the public, as shown by its recovery from a disastrous fire four years ago. The future of industrial Oregon rests in the support she gives such men as W. W. Rosebraugh, and his iron working plant.

VALUE LIES IN SERVICE TO USER
All Costly Overhead Expenses Is Paid by Customer At Loss of Real Value

The cost to a customer if every garment purchased represents the real value of the garment, plus the overhead expense of the retail merchant. Plate glass, marble wall, mahogany furniture and fixtures, ultra stylish settings and service make a strong appeal to those who can afford to include their cost in the price paid for clothing, but they add nothing to the value of the garment. The average individual prefers patronizing less pretentious establishments where the purchase price represents real value and less overhead. The Capital Exchange,

A HOME AWAY FROM HOME, IN SALEM
Bligh, and New Salem Hotels Represent Salem Hospitality At Its Best

Entertaining the stranger within the gates of the city is an art possessed by but few. When a city has a hotel managed by an artist of that sort it soon finds that such a hostelry is not only an asset to the proprietor but a distinct asset to the entire city. The Bligh Hotel and the New Salem Hotel are striking examples of the statement above. Their cozy and comfortable rooms are scrupulously clean and inviting to the guest. The atmosphere of the employees and the entire service is in harmony with the motto displayed of "A Home Away From Home." Salem being the state capital is in a position to set a pace of Oregon hospitality. It, above all other cities of the state, carries an obligation to maintain the good name of Oregon in its relations with the traveling public. It is supposed to be a city above reproach. A sort of outstanding figure in the community of cities very much as the ministers son is theoretically supposed to be a concrete example of the teachings of his father. Salem is more in the lime light of public criticism and public judgment than any other city in the state. The city itself understands the standards by which it is measured, and its efforts to measure up to that standard are well recognized by the public. The hotel service rendered by the Bligh and the new Salem is based upon the desire of the management to measure up to the Salem standard of "Oregon Quality." Frank D. Bligh, the manager, is by nature and education, an ideal hotel man. His father was an outstanding genius along this line, and Frank has been an apt student of his father's training for the position he holds as the representative of Salem hospitality to the traveling public. Safe At Home "For promising to let him attend all baseball games this summer, Joe bought his wife a ring." "I see. An exchange of diamonds." —Buster Keaton.

A HUBBARD GRAPE VINE IS A WHOPPER
It Is Nearly a Foot and a Half in Diameter; Planted in Pioneer Days
A recent issue of the Hubbard Enterprise contained the following:
"Several of the valley papers lately printed an article in regard to the oldest grape vine in the valley, which is still growing here. The vine was set out by Mr. Hubbard, founder of the city, in 1859. The vine is on the George Wolfer place and is nearly a foot and a half in diameter. The grapes are of the Concord type, the exact variety being unknown. The vine yields a large amount of grapes each year."
