REFORESTATION DEMANDS SYSTEM

Practical Plan Necessary for State Declares Fire Warden Scott

"Oregon must adopt a practical reforestation plan, or else enter the ranks of the deforested states," declared Fire Warden Scott, of Portland, in addressing the Lions at their regular meeting Friday noon at the Marion hotel.

"There is need for the wholehearted support of the people to put across this kind of a move, but it is absolutely necessary. The time will come when the man who creates a fire in the forest will be considered as a criminal. When society has such an expression of sentiment, then results will be obtained," continued the speaker, who told of the problems of the fire wardens.

Fire Warden Scott said that 84 per cent of the forest blazes were created by the carelessness of man. Of the total number of fires last year, only 1577 of the 1838 fires (84 per cent) were credited to man's carelessness. Oregon has one of the best fire laws in the United States, and has fully received the endorsement of the federal government, he said.

At present there are five million acres of logged off land which can be utilized for reforestation purposes. He also stated that the
