Entered at the Postoffice in Salem, Oregon, as second-class matter

"THE SECOND CITY" (Woodburn Independent.) Salem is still short of the acquirement of the requisite amount of stock subscriptions for a linen mill. We would suggest that Woodburn be permitted to contribute the balance due and the mill be located here.

The tireless bunch of hustlers on the soliciting committees are doing their utmost to have Salem embrace this "most fitting opportunity to make it the second city in commercial importance in the state"

Woodburn is invited to contribute to this development, and there is every reason why this invitation should be gladly accepted, because the development of a flax and linen center in this district will surely affect beneficially everything in and around Woodburn.

A trip through the farming districts reveals numerous piles of straw which have lain for a long time waiting for some use to be made of them. To the observer this looks like waste. To some owners straw is a valueless by-product—or at the most its value is negligible except for livestock bedding.

But straw is very valuable. When used for livestock bedding it absorbs and saves much valuable fertilizer. Chemical experiments have revealed its many elements of great value to manufacturing and general industrial uses.

In straw which has been considered of so small value there has been tremendous undeveloped wealth. Methods for obtaining this wealth have been demonstrated through applications of manufacturing chemistry.

This is Founders Day. Honor the pioneers of Oregon by your presence at Champeau park today. For an even quarter of a century there has gathered each year on this historic spot men and women whose ancestors helped make Oregon history.

Today there will be recounted the stories of pioneers' sacrifices and accomplishments. There will be a joyous revival of days gone by, and out of this resume of pioneer hopes and endeavors there will come to all who read, or hear the program increased enthusiasm and love for Oregon and its worthy founders.
