"Is Prohibition a Failure" Topic Discussed Before Professional Men

Excellent Address Delivered at Presbyterian Church by Rev. Charles E. Ward, Pastor of Congregational Church

By AUDRED BUNCH

A large audience last evening at the high school witnessed "Safety First," a three-act comedy farce enjoyed more mirth-provoking scenes per five minutes than months before had held for them. A unique fact was that boys composed the entire cast, with Ezra Webb and Clarence Hamilton sharing honors as leading "ladies."

The play, of melodramatic and farcical plot from first to last, opened in the living room of Jack Montgomery's suburban home with a wife and her newly acquired maid immersed in their fears.

The plot deepens with the addition to the scene of Elmer, (George Hester) and grows increasingly turbulent when the thunderous Abu Ben Mocha (Edward Mocha) makes a threatening entrance.

Jack Montgomery, and Jerry Arnold with his helpful motto, "safety first," played opposite the two "feminine" leads in their winsome attire, oddly complimented with heavy veils.

Dennis Heenan, as McNutt, played varying roles—from that of detective and gate guard to Mary Ann's "fancy."

The colorful part of Zuleika, the alleged Turkish maid, was vigorously portrayed by Ivan White, Gerald Mero as Mrs. Bridger, the mother-in-law, played what was as near a character lead as a farce may have. Perhaps the most consistent and most naive role was that taken by the ubiquitous maid, Mary Jane (John Creech).

The plot comes to a precipitate denouement with the third act given in two scenes. The garden setting was particularly attractive.

Numbers by the high school orchestra under the direction of Miss Lena Belle Tartar, added to the pleasure of the performance sponsored so successfully under the auspices of the K. O. club, with Miss Lella Johnson as coach.

The following management assisted: Faculty advisor, Mrs. Ada Ross; E. A. Tibbets, general manager; Hugh Adams, ticket manager; Ada Ross, reserved seat manager; Charles Hegaman, program; Francis Lutz, stage and property manager; Martin Redding, head usher.

"I mean a killing job." "No." "Don't You Hear?" "He isn't absolutely safe, then," she said. "It needs the fear of the chair to keep a fellow like him in line. If it came to a question of his own skin, he'd turn us up in a second. I'd advise planting something on him if you expect to continue making use of him."

Her tone was as cool as if she were discussing the proper treatment for rose bugs, and an involuntary shiver shook me at this new evidence of her utter calmness. She gave a delighted little chuckle as she felt the movement of my body.

"Shocked, sweetheart!" she drawled. "Well, you'd better get used to it! You'll have plenty to occupy your nervous system pretty soon—what's that?"

She broke off abruptly, clutching at the big man's arm. "What's what?" he demanded, in evident amazement.

"Listen. Don't you hear anything?" The big man's face darkened.

"I—but it may not be." "And again it may," Grace Draper snapped. "As George says, they're always in couples."

Because of the blanket swathing me, I had not before heard the sound which so evidently alarmed them, but now it came to me distinctly, the putt-putt of a motorcycle. The big man was peering out of the window back of us, and he spoke excitedly.

"Coming fast—well, I'll be cussed!"

"George, himself won't know it in a few hours," the big man returned. "Trust Tony. He's about the best in the business, and the cream of the joke is that he's strictly honest as far as his legitimate repair business goes. He's a top-notch in repair work, and his prices are always strictly fair, and he's a most obliging cuss. We wouldn't have dared go in there with this stunt in the summer-time—too many chance customers there. He can manage stolen cars because of a big barn in the rear into which he shoves them the minute they come in, and which can't be seen from the front, so ordinary customers suspect nothing—but we couldn't have pulled this."

"Have you anything on him, beside being a fence for stolen cars?" Grace Draper asked thoughtfully.

"And for bootleggers," the big man amended.

"Can the trimmings and speak your piece," Grace Draper admonished irritably. "What's he doing?" (To Be Continued)

THE GARAGE "GET-AWAY"

MADGE'S CAPTORS CONTRIVED

If I had cherished any wild hopes that the unseen watcher in the coop-like office of Tiny's garage would rush to my rescue when I tore the wrapping from my face, they were ruthlessly crushed. There was no sound or movement from the tiny room, and the only person affected was Tony. His jaw dropped in amazement as he saw the gag in my mouth, and a crafty look spread over his face.

"You no tell me dees!" he gasped. "Stewed ees all right, moocha peopies stewed. But dees—dangerous—I no like."

The big man, with a muttered
