Sausage Meat Causes Death of Baby Elephant

BERLIN-German sausage, i s believed, was the cause recently of the death of Mampe, an African baby elephnat, which, with his twin brother, Karl, was given to the Berlin zoo a few months ago. The twins had become the pets of the elephant house, but since the death of Mampe the other is inconsolable and refuses to eat. Mampe died from stomach trouble after a week's illness, caused, the veterinarians believe by meat given to it by some child. Animal experts of the zoo have found Indian elephants more hardy and adaptable to the diet which a nothern zoo affords than those from Africa.

Vegetarianism Originates in Childhood, Says Doctor

LONDON, May 30 .- The psychological origin of vegetarianism often unconsciously takes place during childhood, it was explained recently by Dr. David Forsyth, a physician of note and former president of the Psycho-Neurological society, in a lecture on "Diet and Psychology."

Illustrating how certain incidents take root in a child's mind and showed themselves in adult life with regard to taking food. Dr. Forsyth took as an example a child, who at an early age, had been frightened by a large collie ROAD WILL REORGANIZE dog. The dog ran after the child and barked and the child quite going to kill and eat him. After that he had a morbid fear of killing anything, and refused flesh of fore it could be eaten. From that time onward the child was a vegetarian, he said. This, added the speaker, was the psychological origin of vegetarianism. Most vegetarians, he pointed eating meat the fact that they dis-It provides for an exchange of liked the thought of taking life. and most vegetarians had that
