(The Portland quota for the second linen mill for Salem is $175,000. A committee of the Portland Chamber of Commerce some days ago named this as the amount that would be subscribed by the people of that city, towards the $640,000 capital stock of the proposed company. The Oregonian of yesterday contained the following news item, showing that the amount is believed to be forthcoming soon:)

The common barberry on which the grain smut is dependent during the winter months in Oregon, is best destroyed in the spring and summer when the leaves are easily recognized, say experiment station specialists. The bushes are dug completely out of the ground, with care that no pieces of roots are overlooked. If pieces are left in the ground young sprouts may grow from them.

At a meeting yesterday of a small group of Portland business men interested in subscribing the city's quota of $175,000 wanted to assure erection of a big linen mill in the Willamette valley, stock subscriptions totaling $52,000 were recorded. These were made by eight men who sat in the conference with a delegation from Salem, and three other participants asked a little time in which to consider the amounts they would subscribe.

Vegetable gardeners in western Oregon can find nitrate of soda as a good top dressing on spinach if broadcast between rains, according to A. G. Bouquet, professor of vegetable gardening at the college. It should not be applied, however, when the plants are wet. Superphosphate may be mixed with the nitrate of soda to make it easier to apply. The rate of application is 200 pounds of each an acre.

Those who attended the conference said that the enthusiasm developed assured that Portland's committee would obtain the full quota in a short time. The meeting was held in the directors' room of the United States National bank. Tom Kay, state treasurer, and Colonel W. T. Bartram, authority on the linen manufacturing industry in Canada, addressed the conference. Others present from Salem were T. M. Hicks, John H. McNary and Tom Livesley.

"Eat vegetables for vitamins," is the slogan on the attractive package labels recently issued by the Market Grower's Journal, national vegetable publication. The labels are in colors, with a basket of vegetables in the center, and space for the grower's name and advertisement. They are four by five inches in size and summed for sticking to packages. The Market Grower's Journal offers them at the rate of $3.50 a 1000, and will be glad to submit samples to any vegetable grower who desires them to advertise his products.

 party, announced yesterday. Advertising has been responsible, chiefly, he said, for this wide interest and he expressed the opinion that the northwest was again coming into its own in attracting the attention of the rest of the country. The northwest states, Mr. Smith said, are now of great interest, apparently, to practical settlers than at any time for the past eight years.

Editor Statesman:
 A few words at your request: While the central states are badly hit by late frosts, high winds and tornadoes, the Willamette valley is smiling with the greatest crop of grain, hay, and many varieties of fruit, which will go a long way toward feeding the world, and our land is offered at a less price according to what it will produce, than any place in the place in the United States. And
