THE ONLY WAY:—I am the way, the truth, and the life. John 14: 6.

STILL WAITING

(Portland Journal.)

A national convention was held at Cleveland a year ago. At that convention were the following men interested in sugar, who were delegates to the convention:

William Wrigley, owner of the Gunnison Sugar company, delegate from Illinois.

Charles B. Warren, president of the Michigan Sugar company, delegate from Michigan.

William L. Peterkin, president of the Great Western Sugar company, delegate from Colorado.

Charles W. Waterman, counsel for the Great Western Sugar company, delegate from Colorado.

John D. Spreckels, president of the Spreckels Beet Sugar company and the Western Sugar Refining company, delegate from California.

William H. Wallace, vice president of the Michigan Sugar company, delegate from Michigan.

William V. Hodges, counsel for the Holly Sugar company, delegate from Colorado.

Gerrit J. Diekema, president of the Holland St. Louis Sugar company, delegate from Michigan.

E. O. Howard, director of the Utah Idaho Sugar company, delegate from Utah.

That convention nominated Mr. Coolidge for president. The federal tariff commission, a year ago, recommended to the president that the sugar schedule be reduced, pointing out that such reduction could be absorbed by the companies and that it would save the public $200,000 a day.

Mr. Coolidge did not reduce the sugar schedule. He has not done it yet. But he did change the tariff commission.

The above from the editorial columns of the Portland Journal is without doubt propaganda of the Wall Street trust owning the refineries for Cuban raw sugar along the Atlantic seaboard, and also owning or controlling most of the Cuban sugar lands and cane plantations and the grinding factories of the cane to produce the raw product—

For the names of delegates mentioned are all interested in beet sugar factories; every one of them, and only one of them, John D. Spreckels of California, being in any way interested in refineries for working raw cane sugars; and in his case his raw products come from Hawaii and the Philippines; from American soil.

The federal tariff commission was divided on its recommendation, and the leading free trade member of the commission, Culbertson, who joined in the majority report, is now going out of the commission; lifted out by President Coolidge.

Of course the matter is "still waiting," and it will wait, till this country goes for free trade—which will likely be many a year in the future, if the time ever arrives.

The statement that the reduction on raw sugars, recommended by a majority of the tariff commission under the elastic provisions of the tariff, would "save the public $200,000 a day" is a lie—

And in fact it would save the public nothing, but on the contrary would ere long cost the public more than that sum a day. This would happen as soon as the Wall Street sugar trust could control the situation, through the crippling or destruction of the beet sugar industry in this country. Absolutely. The Wall Street trust would make the saving for itself, and it would pass none of it to the public, but would sting the public as soon as it was free from the danger of competition.

Mr. Coolidge considered the 250,000 growers of sugar beets in this country, and he considered the interests of the public. The number of sugar beet growers is much increased this year, in Minnesota, Iowa, Washington, and a number of other states. It will continue to grow, under present conditions, and the game of the Wall Street sugar trust, with all of its propaganda, will not work.

Does the Portland Journal not realize that we would have no prospect of getting beet sugar factories in Oregon with a lowering of the protective rates?

Does that paper realize that this country would have no chance to become self sufficient in sugar with such a lowering of the rates?

Boosting the game of the Wall Street sugar trust is the next thing to treason; is against every interest of the great mass of the American people. It is fortunate, however, that the propaganda is futile and worse than silly. Mr. Coolidge met this issue in his campaign for the presidency. It was raised by a savage attack of LaFollette. The voters of the country understood. They voted accordingly. They will keep on doing so. Such attacks as that of the Portland Journal is pouring water on the wheel of the popularity of President Coolidge. The more of it the better for his standing with the great mass of the American people.

Beet sugar growing and manufacturing in this country is either entirely cooperative, or it is very generally what amounts to about the same thing, through the fifty-fifty contracts between the growers and the manufacturers.

IMPORTANT APPOINTMENTS

The choice of Senators Beals and Garland as members should result in a new record for the Oregon fish commission. For years past this department of the state government has been a hotbed of political highbinding and economic extravagance.

Interests assuming to themselves special dispensation to direct the fishing industry of the state for their own special financial benefit have for years maintained shrewd lobbyists at every legislative session to put through their program. Fish committees have usually been obviously subservient to the will of the cannery interests—the public "go hang." The legislature of 1923 appropriated from the state treasury the enormous sum of $221,000 for use of the commission and during a few years previous to that date had appropriated several hundred thousand dollars for the same purpose—artificial propagation of fish. In 1923, the state's lawmakers appropriated only $35,000 for use of the commission with the ultimatum that this, one of the state's great industries, should be placed where it belongs—on a self-supporting basis.

The last legislature appropriated no money for use of the commission but from licenses and from poundage and other fees the commission's income during the present biennum is estimated at $387,000.

From the courageous stand of the new appointees against the activities of the commission's five hundred dollars-a-month lobbyist and against the lesser of their lobbying satellites during the last legislative session it is expected that the commission's business will now be conducted in an open business-like way. All fishing interests, large and small, in all sections of the state, have reasons to believe they will receive from the present commission a square deal.

The high priced—or any other lobbyist—is not necessary for the commission, and from the past attitude of the new commissioners there will be none employed by them. With confidence in the new commission the legislature should endorse its plans.

Politically these appointments are incidental. From the standpoint of the state they are very important.

MAINTAINING BALANCE

Those who enjoy making comparisons of things old and new, or of conditions past and present will be interested in commodity prices of years ago and now.

Within the past forty years eggs were sold regularly to the consumer at three cents a dozen; hogs at two and a half cents a pound, corn at 25 and wheat at 65 cents a bushel. Farm and other general labor was sixty to seventy-five cents a day. Then a good suit of clothes could be bought for seven or eight dollars and board was less than two dollars a week.

But who shall say that times were better or worse economically then than now? There was, in the days of low prices for food, clothing and labor, less required and for the necessities proportionately less was demanded. Bitter complaints were then heard, however, of the high prices and financial inability to purchase.

In the present we enjoy the comforts and marvels of inventions and manufactures not heard of even a generation ago. We insist upon expensive roads and means of domestic transportation. We support the best of schools and colleges at tremendous expense. We build and maintain homes better equipped and more costly than heretofore. The cost of living has increased from every angle. But these things are for our satisfaction. We can have them for a price.

Whatever our plan or style of living the ratio remains much the same. Earnings and costs individual and government bear generally a well-balanced relationship.

Those who find fault with Oregon climate, beauty or production should be given, forthwith, their passports.

CHAPTER 477

The Way Madge and Katherine Swiftly Met

The news from Grace Draper's lips that Harry Underwood himself was the Big Tangerine, coupled with the knowledge of his perfidy, to which I had listened unseen by either him or the woman in whose power I was, gave me the feeling of having been suddenly drawn down into swirling ocean waves.

Once I had that experience in reality, when—in the first year of my marriage and of my acquaintance with Grace Draper—she had clutched my foot one day when we were swimming, and had drawn me underneath the water in a mad attempt to drown me. Then not yet hardened to murder, she had brought me to the surface again after a hard battle.

That she had regretted her weakness as she termed it, many times, I knew and I had no misgivings as to her course now that she had me in her power. But to know that my only hope of rescue, Harry Underwood's intervention with the Big Tangerine, of whom he had spoken so confidently, had been but a mockery, this well-nigh blotted out consciousness from me.

It was only the blind struggle for life till the last breath, which brought me up from the abyss of unconsciousnes which yearned for me, and gave me strength to listen longer.

"It is nothing to you," Harry Underwood was saying, "what the Big Tangerine does or does not do. But do you imagine—" there was sudden ferocity in his voice—"that I have waited years for the chance to tame that proud, sneering, little devil, to pay her back for affronts you know nothing of, and then let you snatch the opportunity away from me? Not in a million years Give me the key to that room this instant, and don't you dare to show your face there until I come back again! I can't wait to go up there now."

An Effective Threat.

"I will not give you the key," Grace Draper returned steadily, "and I am going to headquarters with your interfeernce and with the real name of the nurse you brought in here yesterday. I don't know what you're trying to do—"

"Perhaps the same stunt you're planning," the man replied, slowly, significantly. "For the last time, will you hand over that key and keep away from that room until I give you permission? Or will you compel me to inform the Prince of a few other keys which are in your possession, and the little fact that the Inner presence—

"You devil," Grace Draper said faintly.

"I thought you'd see reason," he said after a second. "But keep up your spirits," he added with a return to his old bantering manner. "Perhaps neither of us will be compelled to use our emergency plans. If I get back with the old man all right, the whole program ought to go through with a bang, and you can have what's left of both the nurse and the dame behind this key for a rag rug. So long!"

"Who Is It?"

I heard his footsteps across the floor of the room below, and when the door had closed a tearing, hysterical but low-muttered [illegible] from Grace Draper's lips. Then I carefully laid the rug over the jagged hole again, and noiselessly crammed one of the pillows around the radiator pipe to deaden any sound of my movements.

With the desperation of a trapped rat I meant to make an effort to get out of my prison room.

Linda lay deep in drunken slumber.

Grace Draper would not come near me until Harry Underwood's return.

If I made any attempt at all, I must not wait.

Hidden in the lining of my manicure case were a couple of finely-tempered tools which Lillian had given me in the days of our government work for just such a predicament as the one in which I found myself. With infinite caution I rose from the couch and took the tiny but powerful things from the case.

Then I went swiftly to the bathroom, rejoicing in Linda's stertorous breathing, and feverishly began to remove the screws of the lock which held the door separating the bathroom from the next room. Fortunately, the lock was a new one, and the screws were not rusty, so I made comparatively little noise, and it was but a few moments before the lock was loose.

I slipped the bolt which re-enforced the lock on my side, pressed cautiously against the door, and realized there was a similar bolt upon the other side. I wondered how loud a call I dared risk, when I heard a tense whisper through the keyhole.

"Who is it?"

When I answered "Madge!" there was a gasp of amazement, the bolt slid back, and Katherine Bickett was in my arms.

Bits For Breakfast

Wanted, more sunshine—

The "usual June rains" having threatened to become unusual.

This is a big country, with at least 47 different varieties of weather in the past few days in the different sections. Nearly every part of the country has been having abundant rain, with the exception of parts of Colorado, where drouth conditions prevail. This affects some of the sugar beet sections of that state. Every other sugar beet section of the United Staes has had ample rain. So have all he sugar beet sections of Europe; too much in a number of countries.

The employment bureau of the Salem Y. M. C. A. secured jobs for 487 people in May, 88 women and 399 men. That department of the work of the Y. M. C. A., which is carried on with the help of the government, will be one of the busiest of all the departments from this time till all our crops are harvested—in fact, it is a busy and useful department all the year through.

The head lettuce industry of the Labish section has proved itself a second season a comer. It is bound to assume big proportions, selling on quality against all comers. The celery industry of that district is already on the map to stay, and to grow enormously. Among the future big ones will be the asparagus industry, too.

Although the habit is supposed to have passed, America is the greatest snuff consuming nation. Last year our people consumed 40,000,000 pounds. Besides this we smoked 8,000,000,000 cigars and 60,000,000,000 cigarettes, 250,000,000 pounds of pipe tobacco and 130,000,000 pounds of plug and twist. Since the World War the snuff and cigarette habit has doubled.

The vogue for dark furniture in colonial shapes has brought the deserted antiques of New England farm houses into such great demand that the old secretary or cupboard that your grandfather or grandmother used for years and then stored away in the attic is now bringing $500 or more when sold to the ultimate retail customer in some antique shops.

What is more important, do you know that fully 90 per cent of the furniture that is of colonial design is brand new and manufactured in steam power factories in all part of this country, particularly in Michigan, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and New York?

Why not a Father's Day to honor the memory of the good old fellow who cheerfully meets the installment each week upon the piano, phonograph and parlor suite; the gent who pays the rent, grocery bills, light and water bills without a murmur and takes ma and the kids to the beach in the flivver every Sunday afternoon. That's pa, and he's a cheerful old scout, the backbone of the family and the salt of the earth.—Jacksonville Times-Union.

VAUDEVILLE BILL GOOD

EXCEPTIONAL PROGRAM IS BILLED AT THE BLIGH

Exceptional vaudeville is promised at the Bligh theater for today and [illegible] In a blend of music, novelty, comedy, singing and dancing, headed by Jack Merlin and company, in a humorous magical surprise, Merlin not only presents the most advanced manipulation of cards ever attained on the vaudeville stage in a very humorous vein but also combines beautiful scenery, costumes and effects. In addition to his skill, Merlin is a comedian at all times.

Pero and Wilson, European novelty act, juggling, barrel spinning and pantomime in the make-up of two French clowns in evening dress offer a laughable and most enjoyable bit of divertisement.

Dan Gracey, a monologist, promises one of vaudeville's best comedy acts in song, patter and dancing—a comedian who has a penchant for making everybody smile.

Young and Bonta, a petite and talented pair in a cleverly arranged turn in neat and natty costumes. Their revue of songs, dances, music and whistling selections is splendidly woven in a very desirable entertainment.

Hooker and Davis, in a novel dancing revue, present an act of the whirlwind nature, doing eccentric, high kicking, acrobatic and all other dances, finishing with a fast and furious dancing number and hurrah curtain.

BERRIES TO BE FROZEN

SPOKANE, June 4.—Arrangements have been made here, it was announced today by A. J. Brownell, connected with a local canning company, to freeze 360,000 pounds of strawberries for shipment to eastern markets. Contracts already have been made for shipment of 1,000 barrels of the frozen fruit to Chicago and New York. This process of shipment is an innovation here.

LOGGERS KILLED

OLYMPIA, June 4—Thirty fatal industrial accidents, of which seventeen were in logging and lumbering, were reported to the department of labor and industries during the month of May, it was announced today.

The total number of accidents for the month, fatal and non fatal, were 3,608, which was an increase of 3½ per cent over the corresponding month in 1924.
