

JANE COWL COMING TO SALEM TUESDAY NIGHT

APPEARANCE AT GRAND IS ONLY ONE IN OREGON

Interpretation of "Juliet" Declared By Critics to be Best in America

Jane Cowl, who brings her celebrated interpretation of the role of Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet" to the Grand theatre next Tuesday evening, June 9, for the only appearance she will make in Oregon, comes heralded by the dramatic critics of the country with an enthusiasm that has seldom been equalled by any dramatic artist.

By many of the critics she is declared the greatest Juliet that has ever appeared on the American stage and all agree that her interpretation has never been excelled. Generally, too, they have a generous measure of praise for the entire supporting cast, one of the largest ever seen on the coast. Her entire company numbers 52 persons.

Frank Tierney, writing in the San Francisco Daily News, says of Jane Cowl:

"It is difficult for a student of Shakespeare or the veriest lay theatregoer to conceive of one more beautiful than Jane Cowl, or a more powerful, convincing and altogether charming Juliet."

"And if Juliet is beauty itself—and none will deny Miss Cowl's glorious characterization—what a Romeo is Rollo Peters! The youth of the house of the hated Montague who dares to woo a Capulet. Mr. Peters is the perfect Romeo. He is at once the devoted wooer and lover overwhelmed with the ecstasy of his fervor, and the belligerent defender of his proud house."

"The performance of Miss Cowl and Peters Monday night were a thing of such ineffable beauty that one was transported in fancy to those chivalric times when love ruled the world and all else mattered but little. There have been, of course, other Juliets and many, many Romeos. But who will say that in the memory of the most insistent and confirmed patron of the stage have there been a Romeo and Juliet who read into the lines of the great bard more colorful thoughts and grander eloquence of the soul?

"A play is that good as it is good in its weakest link, to paraphrase an ancient truism. And Miss Cowl, with a wisdom born of long stage experience, has surrounded herself with artists—a most capable company of men and women."

There is going to be an immense flax crop, of high quality, and it is time, RIGHT NOW, for every grower to think about harvesting it.

The 12 flax pulling machines that are here in the Salem district now will not be enough. And if more machines are to be ordered, this should be attended to this week. It will be too late, if done later. Some one ought to be attending to this matter.

The Washington-Oregon linen mill, at Vancouver, Wash., is to give its first demonstration on Tuesday of spinning linen yarn and weaving linen cloth on commercial machines. The demonstration is to take place at noon, with many invited guests. W. E. Douglas, president of the company, is sending out invitations to the demonstration.

Salem keeps on building more than a home a day, including Sundays. In the 151 days of this year up to June 1, Salem built 159 homes.
